THE HELPING HAND

—From the Salvation Army Self-Denial week campaign pamphlet:

A few years ago, His Majesty King George, referring to the work in an interview with General Booth said, "When speaking of your Organization, I refer to it as the 'Army of the Helping Hand.'" A very gracious tribute was thus paid to our cause.

The following pages only give the barest outline, just a glimpse of the work, but they show that the helping hand is held out to all, without distinction of creed or nationality, and the blessing of Almighty God has attended our efforts. The poor and needy have been assisted, the weak and struggling have been helped on to their feet. The sinful and wicked have been reformed and regenerated, and made new men and women in Christ Jesus. The people of non-Christian lands have received the light, and many triumphs have been won for our Master.

This pamphlet is issued in connection with our Annual Self-Denial appeal and I tak the opportunity of expressing my sincere appreciation and gratitude to the many friends who so generously assist our work from year to year. We need $260,000 this year for us to keep all our activities at work.

Will you join with-us in "Self-Denial" and thus strengthen and fill the "Helping Hand?" We shall then be able to continue and develop our work.

Commissioner.

MARLBANK.

Spring is here at last and the men who have sap bushes have them tapped and are busy boiling down the sap.

There is a lot of sickness here now. Among the sick are Andrew Berrows, Duncan Axford, Maud Gonyou. Several others are still poorly but getting well.

The ladies of the Red Cross held a tea and sale on Saturday, April 7th, and did real well, served a good lunch and sold nearly everything they had to sell.

Mrs. Hall has returned home after spending the winter with her son, Gordon Hall.

The new garage man has arrived in town, so the autos can be repaired now.

Miss Gertrude Mowers is home again after spending several weeks with friends in Flinton.

The two Toronto young men, who have been visiting at Mr. McAdam's, have returned home.

Mrs. W. Wilson is suffering with blood poison in her hand.

Mr. Hardy Bawley has resigned his position after spending a few days with his mother here.

Mr. L. Mason, from Belleville, is renewing acquaintances here.

Mr. Richman has started his saw going. There is a lot of logs to saw, so will likly be here for some time.

Miss Bessie Allen, who has been visiting in Belleville for the past few weeks, has returned home.

Save the Surface.

And you save all. Martin-Senour 100 per cent. pure paints and varnishes have made a reputation for themselves. Every can guaranteed. Other lines of prepared paints at $1.10 per qt. at WILSON'S HARDWARE.

COLEBROOKE.

The funeral of the late Mrs. Marjorie Lucas, relict of the late Hiram P. Lucas, took place in the Methodist church on Saturday, April 7th. Deceased passed peacefully away on April 4th, after a lingering illness, and until a few hours of her death was a great sufferer which she bore with Christian fortitude. She was 87 years of age and lived her entire life in the township of Camden, moving from Centreville to Colebrooke a number of years ago. Deceased is survived by three daughters, and one son, Mrs. George Riddell, of this place; Mrs. J. Woodcock, of Herchimer, N.Y.; Mrs. R. Richardson, of Boston, Mass., and George D. of this place. The sympathy of the neighborhood is extended to the family in their hour of bereavement.

DESERONTO.

A fire in the marsh was the cause of considerable loss to the owners of Davey's Island when it spread to a house and barn on the island, which were completely destroyed, together with a quantity of fishing appliances which were stored there. Mr. Thomas G. McWain is the reported owner of the property.

A largely attended and very successful tea meeting was held at the manse of the Presbyterian church on Friday under the patronage of the Ladies' Aid of the church.

Mr. Wm. Scott, who some years ago was in charge of the grocery department of A. E. Armitage's general store, and later conducted a grocery store on Main street, was on a visit to friends and acquaintances in town on Thursday. Mr. Scott is now connected with the Polson's wholesale drugs, Montreal.

Mrs. W. H. Hemstridge, of Montreal, is on a visit to her sister, Mrs. E. Smith, Dundas St.

Notices are appearing in the district papers as a warning to farmers and truck drivers that during the month of April no vehicle carrying more than the improved highway with over one-half of a carrying capacity load under penalty of a fine.

Mr. Fred Meyers, the star performer of the Point Anne baseball team last season, is a visitor at his home just now.

There are thousands of ducks making the open waters surrounding the Island. This is a resting and feeding place on their long flight from the south to their northern summer homes.

Mr. Frank Cronk is again on the Bay with his large motor boat in connection with his fishing activities.

Bituminous nut coal, suitable for grates, kitchen heaters and furnaces; $13.00 per ton delivered.

20-a VANLUVEN'S COAL YARD.

GRACE CHURCH SERVICES.

On Sunday last two remarkable services were held at Grace church. The morning sermon on "God and Individuality," was not surpassed by either of the others. But in the afternoon about seven hundred men assembled to hear Mr. Fisher sing and Mr. Hanley preach on "White Blackbirds." It is doubtful if a greater service was ever held in Napanee. The strength of the appeal to men to give themselves to God was unsurpassed in any evening. A quarter hour before service hundreds were turned away from a church that already contained 1000 people. The three-quarter hour of song under Mr. Fisher's guidance is a most uplifting feature of all services. His solos are delightful and varied and most appealing. One of the largest gatherings of the week was for the children's service on Saturday afternoon at three o'clock. This service will be held again on Saturday night. What Mr. Fisher can do with a hundred children in a few short half hours is remarkable. Every night is a special, but Friday night is young people's night and Sunday afternoon at 3 p.m., the congregation will be of married and engaged people only and the topic "Home Wrecking." The services are just half over, enthusiasm and interest are steadily rising, the humanness and hospitality of the leaders, touched by their wide experiences of many kinds of life, makes them very popular with all classes. So far 8550 sittings have been occupied.

New lines arriving in Ladies Patent Kid, Brown Calf low heel Oxfords, also Black Satin Strap Slippers, at WILSON'S SHOE STORE.

"He restibreth my soul." Ps. 23-3; "Redeeming the time, because the days are evil"; Eph. 5-16; "Follow after charity and desire spiritual gifts," Cor. 14-1; "Blessed are they that hear the word of God and keep it," Luke 11-28; "If we love one another, God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us," 1 John 4-12; "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," Phil. 4-13; "I have loved thee with an everlasting love therefore with loving kindness have I drawn thee," Jer. 31-3;

O Lord, our strong defence, be nigh,
Bid all the powers of darkness fly,
Preserve and watch o'er us for good,
Whom Thou has purchased with Thy blood.

AN OLD COMMUNITY

ADOLPHUSTOWN LED WAY FOR MUNICIPAL GOVERNMENT.

A bystander writes as follows in the Toronto Globe: When Kingston celebrates its 250th birthday this summer it will be a proud day, but the claims of some humble neighbors should not be forgotten. There will be no rival in the 250-year-old class in Ontario, but little old Adolphustown has its memories.

Where is Adolphustown? You may ask. Why, it is a small community on Hay Bay, in Lennox and Addington county, a few miles to the northwest of Picton, where the Loyalists landed in 1874 and started the Bay of Quinte settlement. There came also, later on, for a brief stay, a young Scottish boy, afterward known to fame as John A. Macdonald. It was another Loyalist settlement, in numbers, but its citizens were of high order, and their organization here, on 1792, of the town meeting led the way for municipal government in the new province. At one time the sitting of the courts alternated between Kingston and Adolphustown and its old Methodist church still stands, gone back to 1793.

Speaking of the year 1793 in that community, W. S. Herrington says, in his History of Lennox and Addington:

"It must be borne in mind that Adolphustown was recognized as the most important centre of civilization in Upper Canada at that time, and the representatives of this district were men of high standing, whose counsels carried great weight."

Of the place, of Adolphustown in our history, Mr. Herrington says:

"No ramparts have been raised to resist an invading foe, and the 81st battle ground of the revolution within its peaceful precincts; yet every acre of clearing is a battlefield upon which momentous issues have been decided. Not alone in wielding the axe or breaking the soil did the pioneers of Adolphustown prove their mettle; the same sturdy resolution they faced the serious and difficult task of evolving a system of self-government, and their example followed in after years by other municipalities by the introduction and encouragement of social, religious and educational forces, institutions which alone can rescue a community from degradation. We cannot in fairness give Adolphustown a place second to any other municipality in the work of laying the foundations of our present greatness, as we are pleased to style it."

Let us demonstrate how easy it is to do your own painting. Full instructions at WALLACE'S.

STORMS' CORNERS.

On Saturday night, April 7th, at the home of Mr. Edward Hagerman, a birthday party was given in his honor, it being his 81st birthday. About seventy relatives were present, nineteen of whom were grandchildren. After a bountiful supper Mr. Hagerman was presented with a handsome quarter-cut oak davenport, which was upholstered with leather. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Sharp and family, Kingston, Mrs. Sloan and family, of Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. A. A. Hagerman and family, Kingston, Mrs. Harvey Sharp and family, Mr. Ernest Sharp and family, Mr. and Mrs. Herb Clark, of Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Hagerman, Kingston, Mr. and Mrs. Anson Hagerman and family, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Hagerman and family, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Hagerman and family, Mr. and Mrs. John Hagerman and family, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Hagerman and family, of Kingston, Mrs. Carrie Hagerman, Mr. Kenny Hagerman, Miss Helen Hagerman, Miss Beta Hagerman, Mr. Wm. Kenny, Mrs. Amey Snider, Mr. and Mrs. Hill and family, Mr. A. M. Parrott, of Kingston. Mr. Hagerman was born 81 years ago on Lot 17, in the third concession of Ernestown, and lived there until his marriage 51 years ago to Miss Emmontha VanNorman. They then moved to Centreville where they spent one year. He then purchased one hundred acres on Lot 8, in the fifth concession of Ernestown, where he lived for ten years, when he moved to the 100 acre farm now owned by Mr. John Hagerman, it being situated on lot 17 in the 4th concession of Ernestown, where he lived for about eighteen years and having purchased the farm on lots 12 and 13 in the 4th concession of Ernestown, known as the Bowell farm, he moved there and has resided there ever since. Mr. Hagerman at one time owned 400 acres, but has divided most of it among his sons. Until seven years ago he never knew what it was to be sick. At that time he had his leg broken and and foot crushed by a horse in a stable. Three years ago he suffered an attack of pneumonia but now is stronger and healthier than most men at sixty.

Mr. Milligan, of Roblin, is spending a few days in this vicinity the guest of the genial blacksmith, Mr. R. Pennel.

WHY DOESN'T EVERYBODY TALK RIGHT?

Whoever makes frequent or even occasional use of the telephone—and who does not—knows that with some people conversation can be carried on with ease and satisfaction, while with others the attempt to do so invariably results in irritation due to inability to understand. If only everybody would take the not very great trouble to learn how to talk over the telephone many tempers now in danger of ruin, would be saved, many imperiled friendships would acquire new warmth and no end of more or less serious mistakes would be avoided.

The operators in the central offices receive a course of instruction on the proper use of the voice, the best rate of speech and distance from the transmitter that gives highest intelligibility. The result is that nobody ever has any trouble in understanding "Central" and if "Central" not frequently fails to get a number right, the fault almost invariably is that of the person who wants the number but does not know how to ask for it.

In the interest of the social system and the preservation of peace and goodwill on earth, there should be a general reform among telephone subscribers. As there has been provided for them one of the most remarkable, admirable and potentially beneficent machines yet invented by man, it is the obvious duty of everybody to learn how to use it. If the people who try to talk are asked for frequent repitions, that proves either their ignorance of this simple but highly important art of their carelessness, and lessons should be sought by them immediately.

The telephone company, wise in so many things, would be well advised if it offered to give such lessons to all who need them.—N. Y. Times.

Oriental Truth Tests.

Hindus have many queer methods of finding out whether a person is speaking the truth or not.

If a man does anyone an injury, the injured person asks his assailant—whom he is forbidden from directly accusing—to chew a quantity of unboiled rice, previously blessed by the priest. When the suspected person has done so he throws out the grain, and it is carefully examined.

If any of the rice is found to be dry the man is judged guilty, the reason for this is said to be that the man's mouth has become parched through fear.

Another method used by Hindus of forcing the truth from a person is to make him declare a certain thing is so while one of his fingers is dipped in a basin of water brought from the sacred river, the Ganges. No orthodox Hindu would dare to tell an untruth under these conditions.

Yet a third way is to ask a man to make a statement while touching the head of his son. The belief is that should the untruth be told in these circumstances the boy will at once fall dead. Similar tests are employed with a man's parents. The Hindu is firmly convinced that if he tells a life while looking at the sun he will irrevocably be condemned to the torments of hell.

EXPERIMENTAL FARM, OTTAWA, OFFERS FIRST AID TO FARMERS

(Experimental Farms Note)

Farmers who are growing varieties of grain the quality or producing power of which is in doubt are invited to send 8-ounce samples to the Cereal Division, Experimental Farm, Ottawa, for an analysis and field trial. The lots giving greatest promise will be carried over for comparison with standard varieties in subsequent years until their value can be determined. As the land at present available for this work is rather limited, samples will be included in the test in the order of their arrival. Those coming late may have to be held over for trial next year.

The great difference which exists between different varieties in respect to their ability to give paying returns on a given farm makes it highly important that farmers check up periodically the sorts they are growing. This of course, can be done best by trying out on the farm concerned a few of the sorts which are most highly recomended by the nearest Experimental Station.

Unfortunately this sort of work requires more time than the average farmer cares to devote to it. In such cases it is recommended that the reverse course be taken and that samples of seed of the varieties under suspicion be sent the Experimental Farm for study as above suggested. Such a course not only may lead to the acquiring of valuable information regarding the value of a given sort, but also serves to establish an intimate and direct connection between the Cereal Division and the farmer whom it seeks to serve. Furthermore, the experts connected with the above Division recognize in the scheme a possible source from which valuable "starting points" for improved varieties may be discovered.

Samples weighing up to twelve ounces are free by mail when addressed to DOMINION CEREALIST, EXPERIMENTAL FARM, OTTAWA, ONT.

Inside each package there should be a statement giving the name and address of the sender, name or names by which the variety has been known, where the seed was first obtained and when, the apparent suitability of the variety for the district where grown, its susceptibility to rust and smut, ability to stand up under adverse conditions, nature of soil where grown, system of cultivation followed, and any other information which might be of interest.

A PIONEER FIRE CHIEF.

From Bucket Brigade to Motor Department Service.

John Howe Carlisle, veteran head of the Vancouver Fire Department, is generally credited with being the father of fire automobile apparatus in Canada, and possibly on the American continent.

Official records show that in 1907 Chief Carlisle inaugurated a demand for motive equipment to replace horse-drawn vehicles in the coast city. There was considable opposition to the innovation at first, chiefly on the score of unreliability, for at that date automobiles were still some distance from mechanical perfection. But the chief persevered, and in March, 1908, the first two automotive wagons were put on the strength of the Vancouver department. By June, 1917, the city had the first all-motorized fire department in Canada.

Chief Carlisle holds the long-service honors in the British Columbia town. Born at Hillsboro, New Brunswick, in November, 1858, he followed Horace Greeley's advice at an early age, and in 1886 he organized the first volunteer fire brigade in Vancouver, then very much of a "shack town." Three years later he was made chief of the paid and permanent department, comprising thirteen men, one team, and a Silsby hose wagon, the first to be used on the Pacific coast.

During the thirty-six years he has been fighting fire, Chief Carlisle has seen the brigade grow to 191 men, who work on the two-platoon system, with an equipment which leaves little to be desired.

Last June the native sons of Vancouver presented Chief Carlisle with an "Appreciation Medal," given for exemplary and valuable civic service. This was conferred on the recipient with imposing public ceremony, it being the intention to bestow one medal a year on worthy personages. Chief Carlisle had the distinction of being the unanimous choice for the first presentation.

Official machinery was set in motion last year to have the much-coveted Imperial Service Medal, more familiarly known as the "King's Police Medal" awarded to Chief Carlisle by his Majesty in the New Year's list of honors, but this did not materialize. Efforts are being continued to this end, Lieutenant-Governor Walter Nichol, Mayor Tisdall, the Secretary of State at Ottawa, and high authorities in England being keenly interested in trying to secure this recognition of long and meritorious services. To date, only two such medals have been awarded in British Columbia, one to Lieut.-Col. Wolfenden, late King's printer for the province, and the other to the late John Sprott, road superintendent for the New Westminster district.

Roller Bearings for Trains.

Successful roller bearings for trains, for a long time a dream of engineers, seem to have now been produced in the Old Country. One man pushed with ease a twenty-seven ton coach equipped with the new bearings, whereas it had taken seven men to push it without the bearings. It is expected that the saving in fuel will be about thirty per cent.

Running Water!

When and Where You Want It

On any farm of average size at least one hour a day—36½ ten hour working days a year—are spent in the irksome, wearying task of pumping water. 36½ days which one of my Toronto Windmills will give you for profitable work, rest or recreation—besides supplying running water wherever you want it.

The one bothersome task, that of oiling the windmill in all kinds of weather, is overcome in the Toronto Self-Oiler, which requires fresh oil only "once a year." Friction and wear are practically abolished. Toronto windmills, too, can be made absolutely self-regulating in operation.

The "Toronto" Tower will stand for a lifetime because it is the heaviest, strongest and best-braced one built for any windmill.

Let me explain why I believe this is one of the biggest conveniences you can have.

The Standard of Comparison

Canada's Standard Four

McLaughlin Buick "Master Four" Touring 23-35 Special

IN beauty of appearance, dependability and economy of operation, this "Master Four" Touring has established an entirely new standard for four-cylinder cars. Sturdy, dependable, always ready to go, it is perfectly suited to the needs of the average family.

The seats are deep and low, with plenty of leg-room in both compartments. The steering column is in exactly the right position for driving comfort and the gear shift lever is high enough to prevent bending and reaching. Some of the many unusual refinements on a car of this class are transmission lock, windshield adjustable from the inside, nickelled bumper, walnut dash, rear vision mirror, combination tail and stop light, drum type head and parking lamps, crown fenders and scuff plates.

Built in Canada by Canadians for service under Canadian highway and climatic conditions. No "Four" on the market is so well suited for rugged use at so low a cost, both initial and upkeep, as the McLaughlin-Buick Master Four edition of "Canada's Standard Car."

A Chicago Building.

On the ground floor of a new office building, being erected by the First Methodist Episcopal Church at the corner of Washington and Clark streets, in the Chicago business district, has been built the church proper, two stories high, and capable, with its balcony, of seating more than 1,500 persons. A special interior foyer is run from Clark street directly to the church, so that both convenience and privacy are secured. The business elevators are reached by another foyer opening on Washington street. The building, twenty-one stories high, is admirably done in French gothic, and has a beautiful steeple, with chimes, rising to a height of 556 feet above the street level, one foot higher than the Washington monument. It is being erected to give expression to the idea that religion is not merely a "Sunday matter," but rather an integral part of life which should be of concern to the business man and worker every day in the week. Carrying out this theme, it is planned to hold services at noon throughout the week, and conduct the various charities and activities of the church within "earshot" of the worker.—Popular Mechanics.

Highwaymen's Haunts Are Links to "Good Old Days" In English Countryside

There still remain in various parts of England some of those old inns which once had a well-deserved reputation for an unholy alliance with the highwaymen in those bygone days which are so mistakenly termed the "good old times."

It was not without good reason that many of the wayside hostelries, in the days when coaches and post-chaises carried wealthy, timorous passengers, were feared. Mine host himself might be above suspicion of friendship with those who lurked in lonely turns of the highway, ready with pistol and the command, "Stand and deliver!"; but his ostlers and other servants were frequently hand-in-glove with the professors of highway robbery.

When John Nevison, the celebrated Yorkshire highwayman, was tried at York, together with his accomplice, it was stated on oath that he frequented the Talbot, at Newark, where the landlord and others were known to be in the pay of the gang. Nevison himself had been arrested at the Three Houses' Inn, at Sandal.

The most famous highwayman of all time, Dick Turpin, was, curiously enough, born in an inn—the Crown, at Hempstead, Essex, in 1705. His father was landlord of the place. In the registers of the church, the entry of Richard's baptism may still be seen.

This low, cowardly fellow, whose career was not in the least like the romances told of him, was rarely of sufficient pluck to rob singly. He preferred to do his plundering in company. Nor was he ever really much of a highwayman, but rather, a horse thief. And the famous "Ride to York" was performed not by him but by Nevison, before Turpin was born. We owe the Dick Turpin legend to the novelist, Harrison Ainsworth.

Turpin's career came to an end with his arrest at the Green Dragon, Welton, near Beverley, for horse-stealing. He was hanged at York, April 17th, 1738, when thirty-four years old.

The great lonely commons near London were the favorite hunting places of the highwaymen. Across those desolate spots ran the high roads, where travelers were generally robbed.

Very late in the highwayman era a remarkable occurrence took place on the Bath Road, just west of Hounslow Heath, which itself was a dreadful region. Here highwaymen waited for the coaches and the post-chaises of the wealthier traveler, and there was a footpad in every bush for the humbler pedestrians, who were lucky if they were not cudgelled and robbed of what little they had, down even to their shirts.

Two inns still standing at Lipsom Green—the Three Magpies and the Red Magpie—played parts in this affair. The last named is a humble, heavily-thatched beerhouse, formerly much frequented by questionable characters.

On a night in 1673, Mr. Mellish, brother of the then member of Parliament for Grimsby, was returning from a day's hunting in Windsor Forest, when, as his carriage was passing the Three Magpies, it was attacked by three footpads. One held the horses' heads, while the other two guarded the windows, firing a shot now and then to terrify the occupants.

No resistance was offered to the demand for money, and purses and banknotes were handed over as a matter of course. Then the carriage was allowed to proceed, a parting shot being fired after it. That shot struck the unfortunate Mr. Mellish in the head. He was removed to the Three Magpies, where he died shortly after.

Not far distant, in a little-visited nook between the Bath and Exeter roads, is a hamlet named Hatton. There stood the innocent-looking Green Man, facing a horse-pond. But in the old times it was by no means so innocent as it looked, for at the back of the grate in the parlor there was a very cleverly-contrived highwayman's hiding-hole.

Therein the shy and retiring bandits of the heath took refuge when the scent was getting too hot, and the Bow Street runners were uncomfortably close on their heels.

The hole is there yet, but alterations in the class of customers entertained at the Green Man have rendered concealment no longer necessary, and the entrance has been bricked up.

Creatures With Three Eyes.

Even the wildest monsters that inhabit Victor Hugo's romances are only known to possess one eye, or at the most two. Some of the islands off the coast of New Zealand, however, are the home of curious creatures known as tuateras, which are supposed to be the oldest living type of animal.

These are distinguished by a quaint organ on the top of the head, known as the pineal gland, which is in reality a third eye.

Dr. Dendy, the famous entomologist, has also discovered in New Zealand another animal with a third eye. This is the lamproy, whose third eye, situated on the top of its head, is covered with a thin coating of skin. It seems doubtful, therefore, whether the lamprey is able to make use of it for seeing purposes.

Printing Cloth.

In the days before the printing machine was invented or even until its use became general, calico cloth was printed by hand by the block method. By this method the design was outlined on the surface of a wooden block, the outlines were bounded by pieces of brass or copper and the surface filled in with felt to hold the color, and sometimes designs of as many as three or four colors were printed by this method. When the block was completed it was dipped in a color box and the pattern was then impressed upon the fabric by stamping by hand; and for each color to be printed the cloth had to be stamped by a separate operation. The work was slow and laborious and in printing even some patterns that were printed in those days it would take a man and one or two helpers a whole year to print as many yards of cloth as can be printed on a modern printing machine in probably a day or little more.

The United States bought Canadian produce during February to the value of $26,719,205 in comparison with $20,116,856, Canada's exports to the United States in 1922. Exports of Canadian produce to the United Kingdom were $17,874,260 in February 1923, and $15,346,265 in February 1922.

Canadian exports of whiskey for the year ending March 31st, 1923, amounted to 339,181 gallons valued at $2,698,377; for the previous year the quantity exported was 192,910 gallons valued at $882,729. Ale and beer exported during the past year amounted to 1,454,629 gallons, while for the previous twelve months the amount was only 421,960 gallons.

Making Canada Europe's best and quickest road to the Orient means much to this country and the Canadian Pacific Railway, in co-operation with the steamship lines arranging its route from England or France to Japan so as to reduce the journey by four days, has made the most determined effort to secure competition of travel via the Suez Canal. About 10,000 miles in 21 days is better than even Jules Verne thought of.

A silver tag attached to the dorsal fin of each fish before its release after the eggs have been removed at the Dominion Government hatcheries is one of the methods resorted to by the Marine Department for tracing the life history of the fish. A reward of $1 is paid by the Department for the return of silver tags that are being attached to Atlantic salmon, together with scales from the side of the fish, and particulars regarding the length, weight and place of capture.

With a view to developing tourist resorts along the line in Central and Western Ontario, the Canadian Pacific Railway will erect Bungalow Camps after the style of those successfully operated in the Rockies. The first three will be built in the Kingston, French River and Lake of the Woods districts, and will be ready for occupation by July 1st. The low cost of construction and maintenance will make it possible for the public to enjoy rates within the standard hotel, and the camps will prove a boon to those of moderate means who believe to spend a couple of weeks or more or less in the open.

BOXING FOR BRIDES.

Penguins Have a Strange Way of Making Love.

There is no more remarkable method of winning a bride than that adopted by the penguin.

These strange birds propose to their sweethearts by placing a pebble between their feet, as a pledge of affection and a promise of industry in building the stone nest in which these creatures live.

The male birds have to fight for their brides. They go for each other like human boxers, hammering their opponents with their flippers until they are exhausted.

An amusing story is told of a member of Captain Scott's last expedition. Penguins have no fear of human beings, and during the mating season a male bird approached one of the explorers and dropped a pebble at his feet! As the recipient of this delicate attention failed to understand, the bird nibbled at his trousers and walked away in a very bad temper.

Penguins make tremendous marches from one place to another. They form processions which march for hundreds of miles across frozen wastes until they reach new feeding grounds. Some proceed upright on their two feet; others toboggan. Their flappers, which originally were wings, are now of no use for anything but swimming.

These marches are made without food of any kind, for it is only in open water that penguins can find the shrimps and so on which form their diet.

Scientists tell us that these birds came originally from tropical countries, and as they now live in places where the temperature is anything down to a hundred and fifty degrees below zero, they have had to face great changes.

Penguins have considerable intelligence. They have their own games, one of which is very similar to "touch," the popular children's game.

A Lawyers' Harvest.

A total of $214,234 was paid by the Dominion Government to barristers and solicitors employed in connection with the arbitration proceedings of the Canadian Northern and Grand Trunk Railways, according to a return tabled in the House of Commons by Hon. A FRONTIER COLLEGE

INSTITUTION IS KNOWN AS A UNIVERSITY IN OVERALLS.

Splendid Work Has Been Accomplished In Enabling Workers of Canada to Avail Themselves of the Benefits of Higher Education —Knowledge Proves a Strong Weapon Against Bolshevism.

"The University in Overalls" is the happy title Prof. Alfred Fitzpatrick has chosen for the latest edition of his book dealing with the work of the Frontier College. It is a work we have approved in the past, and we are glad to note that it is receiving increasing attention and respect as time goes on. It has now been in operation for some twenty years, and in that time has had to overcome many obstacles, the first being the flat contention that Prof. Fitzpatrick was attempting the impossible, when he proposed to induce men who had worked hard all day, perhaps twelve hours at a stretch, to spend a couple of hours after dinner in study. Nearly everybody said that the men would be too tired. That they would choose to spend their time either in card games or in sleep was asserted as an obvious fact. But this fact has proved not to be a fact. The Frontier College is not suffering, and for a long time has not suffered, because of the unwillingness of the men to attend its classes when they have had the opportunity. If it receives the necessary financial support there is practically no limit to the scope of its operations, for the field is ready and harvesters of the right kind are to be had.

One of the great educational problems of Canada is to enable the manual and other workers to avail themselves of the privileges of higher education. Those of them who live in the cities have night schools, special lectures, the great libraries and other means of continuing their education while they earn their living. But those who do their work far from centers of civilization, the scores of thousands who toil in the mines, in the lumber camps and on railroad construction work, have none of these opportunities. They cannot go to the schools while they are working, so the schools go to them in the form of instructors from the Frontier College. Thousands of these men are newcomers and can hardly speak the English language, a fact which retards the process by which they should be made good Canadians, and also tends to keep their earning capacity at the minimum. It is obviously an advantage that these men should be taught the language as soon as possible and merged with the rest of the population. This is the foundation work of the Frontier College, and alone would justify its existence.

There are other thousands of native born Canadians working thus, far from civilization, men who perhaps can read and write but who have lacked opportunities to improve themselves. Since the Frontier College instructors are all university men it is plain that they can carry an apt student to a point where he could enter a university, and this has been done in many cases. If they can only fire a man with an ambition to improve himself they will have done a fine thing for that man and for the country of which he is a citizen. Apart from educational work these instructors in the past have been found to be a fine instrument with which to fight Bolshevism and some other exotic cults that have been imported by European immigrants. They are looked up to by the men as being obviously better informed, and are admirably adapted to expose the fallacies by which fanatical Bolshevists and others delude the more ignorant. They might be regarded, from this point of view, as sentinels or outposts, in a position to stamp out anarchistic sparks and quench smouldering prejudices before a conflagration can make headway.

One secret of the success of the college is that the instructors, like their pupils, earn their living by manual labor. They work by day side by side with the men whom they will teach at night, and unless they can earn the respect of the men by the work they do in the day time, it is not likely that they will win much respect by the instruction they give at night. They must show qualities of leadership at all times, and they have no soft jobs. They are laborers, brakemen, watchmen, loggers, miners, navvies, chore boys and mechanics. Few of them are clerks. They have found that the closer they get to them at their daily task the closer they can get to them spiritually. Brains and education count even in manual labor, and it is the rule rather than the exception to find an instructor from the Frontier College regarded as the leader of whatever gang he happens to be working with.

Prof. Fitzpatrick pays a generous tribute to the five hundred or more instructors who, many of them for many years, have carried on this important work. He says, "Every university in Canada has had graduates or undergraduates in the camps as instructors for the Frontier College. Their whole-hearted purposes, their zeal, their sacrifices at times, have paved the way for fuller recognition of the need for this work. These men have carried on a work patriotic in its essence, but not spectacular; for the most part beyond the reach of publicity. There are few to see or record the quiet heroism of men who love their country and are willing to give without thought of reward." What Alfred Fitzpatrick says of the men under him might be repeated with emphasis concerning himself. He is devoted to his task, he is an enthusiast and a tireless worker in a field which he has made his specialty. An Oxford degree could not take greater pride in the record of his college than Prof. Fitzpatrick takes in the work of the Frontier College.

Coaching Days.

"Traveling in the coaching days was not all hardship," says Mr. Stanley J. Weyman in the Cornhill Magazine.

"It had its own, its peculiar pleasures. A writer of that time dwells with eloquence on the rapture with which he viewed a fine sunrise from the outside of a fast coach in the Great North Road; on the appetite with which he fell to upon a five o'clock breakfast at Doncaster, on the delight with which he heard the nightingales sing on a fine night as he swept through Henley, on the satisfaction of seeing the old Shoreditch Church which betokened the end of the journey. Men did not then hurry at a headlong speed along iron rails, with their head buried in a newspaper, or the latest novel. They learned and knew and had the time to view the objects of interest that fringed the great highway—to recognize the farm at which the great Durham ox was bred, and the house in which the equally great Sir Isaac Newton was born. If these things were strange to them and their appearance promised a good fee, the coachman condescended from his greatness and affably pointed them out.

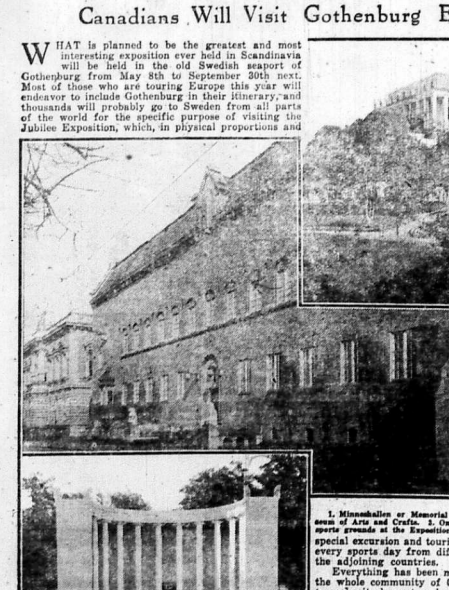

"But to sit through the long winter night, changing an hour from one damp and misty post-chaise to another, to stamp and fume and fret while horses were put to at every stage, to scold an endless succession of incoming and fee an endless series of outgoing post boys, each more sleepy and sullen than the last—this was another matter. To be delayed here, checked there, and overcharged everywhere, to be fobbed off with the worst teams—always reserved for stage, to scold an endless succession of incoming and fee an endless series of outgoing post boys, each more sleepy and sullen than the last—this was another matter. To be delayed here, checked there, and overcharged everywhere, to be fobbed off with the worst teams—always reserved for night travelers—and to find, once started on the long fourteen mile stage, that the off-wheeler was dead lame, to fall asleep and to be roused with every bump—these were the miseries, and costly miseries they were, of old world journeying. This was the seamy side."

Some Curious Beliefs.

The eyes of the pike powdered are wonderful in increasing beauty, according to one old writer. In the South of England it is believed even now that the eating of herrings' brains gives one beauty. The fat of the lamprey, although the animal was of ill omen, was very efficacious in making one's skin smooth and clear, and would also remove smallpox scars. An ointment made from the grease of the glutton, or wolverine, is a certain cure for cutaneous eruptions. The Chinese believe that water in which cockles have been boiled possesses certain medicinal properties, and apply it to the bodies of persons suffering from skin diseases, and particularly of those suffering from smallpox. The monks of the tenth century ordered the ashes of burnt flies for the complexion.

Canadians Will Visit Gothenburg Exposition

WHAT is planned to be the greatest and most interesting exposition ever held in Scandinavia will be held in the old Swedish seaport of Gothenburg from May 8th to September 30th next. Most of those who are touring Europe this year will endeavor to include Gothenburg in their itinerary, and thousands will probably go to Sweden from all parts of the world for the specific purpose of visiting the Jubilee Exposition, which, in physical proportions and variety of exhibits will be the greatest ever held north of the Baltic. The grounds cover over 75 acres, and in addition to historical, cultural and other exhibitions, ranging from fine-arts to exports, numerous international meets will be held; automobile and aviation meets, printing and journalistic congresses and athletic and gymnastic competitions, etc. Foreign athletes are being provided with transportation by the authorities, and such an interest is being taken in the games that special excursion and tourist trains will run practically every sports day from different parts of Sweden and the adjoining countries.

Everything has been most thoroughly planned and the whole community of Gothenburg is working hard to make its largest undertaking a success. Its beautiful situation on the liberty west coast archipelago is a great attraction to the town, which is full of interest and variety from an architectural point of view also. No expense has been spared by the interested individuals of the city itself, and for the purpose of gathering historical material, Baron af Ugglas and Dr. Sixten Strombom have excavated Gothenburg's two ancestral cities, Gamla Lodose and Nya Lodose, and have made some of the most important and interesting archaeological finds in North Europe in recent years. On the site of the ancient town of Gamla Lodose near Gothenburg, Baron af Ugglas, has uncovered a church almost as large as the present Gothenburg Cathedral, several smaller churches, city walls, a castle, private houses, armour, tools, etc., which throw considerable light on the history and culture of early Scandinavia. A model of the church and some of the armour and tools will be exhibited in the historical section of the Exposition. Dr. Strombom's excavations still continue within the limits of the city of Gothenburg, and visitors will have the opportunity of inspecting for themselves the ancient works and fortifications.

Already a large number of Canadians have booked passage on the Canadian Pacific Empress liners for Europe, and the exposition is the first thought of many of them.

On Sunday, April 8th, a fire occurred at the home of R. Richardson, South Napanee. He was insured in the National. The Company received notice of loss on Monday, 9th, and on 10th Mr. A. E. Paul, the Company's Agent, was notified to adjust the loss which was done the same day. Insure with a Company and Agent who will give satisfactory service.

Major Hanley Addresses Business Men.

On Monday evening, at the Campbell House, the business men of Napanee listened to a splendid address by Major Hanley, a veteran of the Great War, lecturer, evangelist and world traveller. Mr. Fisher also delighted the audience with his singing. Dinner was served at 6.30 and the speaking followed. Mayor MacGregor occupied the chair and introduced the speaker of the evening Mr. Hanley, whose splendid address, dealing with business ethics and the many problems confronting the business man, was listened to with rapt attention. A vote of thanks was tendered Messrs. Hanley and Fisher, moved by Mr. U. M. Wilson, C.C.A., and seconded by ex-Mayor Graham. A committee was also selected to take into consideration the forming of a club among the business men of the town and to recommend under what form the club should operate. The resolution embodying the above suggestions was moved by Mr. J. E. Robinson, seconded by Dr. J. P. Vrooman.

Napanee Golf Club.

The Annual Meeting of the Napanee Golf Club was held at the Town Hall, on Wednesday evening, April 11th, at 7.30 p.m. at which there was a very large attendance and the meeting was exceptionally enthusiastic and interesting and the outlook for the club for the year 1923 is vastly more promising than for any previous year during the existence of the Club. Death of Former Napaneean.

Arlington, Mass., April 10.—City Clerk Thomas J. Robinson died at his home, 5 Webster street, last evening, following an illness of short duration, death being due to hardening of the arteries. He was born in Napanee, Ontario, December 22, 1866, the son of John and Catherine Robinson. His father was a pioneer foreman during the Construction of the Grand Trunk Railway through that section. When Thomas J. was two years old his parents moved to Arington, and he had lived there ever since.

The Late J. M. Loyst, Ernestown.

The death of J. M. Loyst, occurred at Ernestown on March 8th. Mr. Loyst was born in 1848 on the old homestead in South Fredericksburgh, and was of U. E. L. descent. The last thirty-seven years of his life were spent at Ernestown. In 1870 he married Margaret E. Mitchell, widow of the late Archibald Mitchell, M.D., Glenvoy, and daughter of the late Squire Mathew Ruttan, Adolphustown, who predeceased him about sixteen years ago. Thirteen years ago he married Mrs. A. J. Bruner, sister of his former wife, who still survives him. Mr. Loyst was a man of strong character and a genial disposition. He was loved and respected by all who knew him. He was a mmbr of the Oddfellow Lodge for over forty years. In 1870 he served in the Fenian Raid. Besides his widow he leaves a stepson, Don. F. Mitchell, St. Clair, Michigan; two sons, George and Charles, Ernesttown, and three daughters, Mrs. A. C. Miller, Mrs. F. P. Lawrence, Ernesttown, and Mrs. Eldin Lawrence, Sydenham, to mourn the loss of a kind husband and loving father. James T. Loyse, on the old homestead, is a brother, and Mrs. Peter Steele, Victoria, B.C., a sister, the only two left of a family of nine.

Got so Weak She Fell in Tracks

Toronto Lady Says Stomach Trouble Caused Collapse—Gives Tanlac Full Credit For Recovery.

"I don't believe I'd be alive today to tell of my recovery if I hadn't taken Tanlac treatment when I did. I feel so thankful that if I could I would go from house to house and tell everybody about this wonderful medicine." This is the grateful statement made the other day by Mrs. Josephine Braithwaite, 13 Bright St., Toronto, Ont.

"Seven years ago my health began to decline, and to think that if I'd only had Tanlac then what a world of suffering I would have missed. Broth and toast was about all I dared eat, gas and pains in my stomach after a meal nearly set me wild, and I would scream with agony. I grew thin as a rail and at times became so weak and dizzy I actually fell in my tracks.

"But since taking Tanlac I now enjoy splendid health. My appetite is wonderful, I haven't a sign of my old troubles, and have gained seventeen pounds. Tanlac has been an untold blessing to me, and I will always praise it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 35-million bottles sold.

DRURY OUTLINES PLANS.

Will Retain Office Even as Leader of Minority Group.

MILTON, Ont., April 16.—Premier Drury addressing some three hundred of his supporters in Halton County, gave the first public intimation of the policy he intends to adopt in appealing to the electors in June. Briefly, he disavowed any suggestions that he was dickering with the Liberal party, but at the same time, he indicated a wish for them to support him in a platform which would not sacrifice the principles of the Progressives. The declaration was drawn from him in response to a demand that morning in the Farmers' Sun, the official organ of the U.F.O., for a clear declaration of a non-coalition policy. "I do not care for the well-being of a party," he said. "If we put party first our movement is bound to failure."

The query propounded was as follows: "Mr. Drury knows that one of three things will happen in the imminent contest. He will be returned with a majority—in which case his course is clear; he will have the largest group, but less than a majority, or a group smaller than one of the others. If he has less than a majority or fails to return with the dominant group, what course does he propose to take?

Premier Drury's answer was: "My position is that if I find—though I believe we shall come back with a majority stronger than before—that we are a minority group, and I find we have men in the House, who, without bribes of position, but through honesty of conviction, Liberal or Conservative—and there is one Conservative who has consistently supported us—if there are enough of such men to support us, I shall advise His Honor that we can form a Government, but I shall not sacrifice the principles of the Progressive movement."

Hon. Mr. Drury made it plain that any alliance between the Farmers and the Conservative group in the Legislature is out of the question, if for no other reason, because of the entirely opposite stand the two groups take in regard to prohibition. He declared that prohibition is the leading issue in the coming contest.

French Seize German Wine.

COLOGNE, April 16.—More than 400,000,000 marks' worth of wine has been seized by the French at Dusseldorf because the Germans had not paid the wine tax, according to an announcement in German quarters.

A message received from Gladbeck says the troops of occupation have commenced seizing coal wagons along the streets of the town, apparently in enforcement of the new order requiring the occupying forces to grant permission to the Germans for the transport of coal and coke.

Girl Dances 65 Hours.

HOUSTON, Texas, April 16.—Miss Magdalene Williams, a Texas beauty, having danced 65 hours and 30 minutes, ceased shuffling about at 3.08 p.m. today, called it a record, and went home, waiting to hear from other places in the United States where attempts are being made to establish world's records for non-stop dancing.

May Shed Blood of Another.

MOSCOW, April 16.—The trial of Archbishop Tikhon, former head of the All-Russian Church, on charges similar to those on which Archbishop Zepliak, Monsignor Butchkavitch and other Catholic prelates were recently convicted, has been definitely fixed to begin on April 23, Commissar of Justice Kurski has informed the Associated Press.

BONAR LAW TO RETIRE

Has Denied Inteution to Quit In Near Future.

British Premier Is Too Ill to Continue His Duties, But His Doctor Has Warned Him Against Taxing His Health — Conservative Party Faces a Serious Situation.

LONDON, April 16.—Following the definite pronouncement of Bonar Law's impending retirement made in the Observer and in an anonymous letter signed "Ex-Minister" in Lord Riddell's News of the World, this official announcement was issued from No. 10 Downing Stret Sunday: "The Prime Minister has no intention whatever of resigning."

The official denial was not unexpected in official circles.

Bonar Law is extremely anxious before resigning to arrange an orderly succession and prevent breaking up the Conservative party and forcing a general election that might give Labor power. Conferences in the inner circles of the party are constantly taking place and it is a race between these attempts to form a new Government in advance and the Premier's growing weakness. His friends as well as his doctors are urging him not to risk fatal collapse by staying too long out of loyalty to the party.

Whether this week or next month it is clear that a new tenant of number 10 Downing Street must be found soon. The article in the Observer declares:

"The choice is between a still weaker Government and a great, even brilliant administration worthy of the country and Empire and equal to the times. The fortunes of unionism for a generation, perhaps of much more than unionism, are at stake."

Garvin in his article rejects the candidacy of Chancellor of the Exchequer Baldwin to succeed Bonar Law and wants Austen Chamberlain for Premier with Lords Balfour and Birkenhead, Sir Robert Horne, Sir L. Worthington Evans and perhaps Churchill, and declares that this has been Bonar Law's wish as to succession from the first. The article continues:

"This would be an administration big enough to transform the national and international situation and it would be the basis of that real national party of the future which will be the only real alternative to the Socialistic party."

Garvin goes on to explain the situation much in the terms of my despatch of April 4. It is clear that Chamberlain will not accept office unless Birkenhead and other Unionist members of Lloyd George's Cabinet who resigned rather than betray their chief on the wrecking of the Coalition are associated with him in the new ministry.

The article in Sunday's News of the World signed "An Ex-Minister of the Crown" declares Mr. Bonar Law's health compels him to choose between his office and complete breakdown. A retiring Premier can advise the King as to his successor, and, the article declares:

"It is understood Mr. Bonar Law will advise His Majesty to send for Lord Curzon. Lord Curzon's health is by no means vigorous, but he will accept with alacrity."

Chancellor of the Exchequer Baldwin, the article says, will be leader of the new Government in the House of Commons. It adds that Lord Curzon will have difficulty in forming a Cabinet owing to the cleavage in the Tory party since the fall of the Coalition. The writer believes an early general election will result.

This anonymous article is sure to attract much attention in political circles as the paper is the organ of Lord Riddell. Owing to his intimacy with former Premier Lloyd George, the News of the World often used to put forward the Coalition Government's views.

It is generally understood in well informed circles that Sir Thomas Horder, Mr. Bonar Law's physician has warned him he must soon retire. However, the possibility of a Curzon Ministry has been thought to be remote owing to the feeling in the party and the country that the Premier should be a member of the House of Commons, not a peer.

Lawyer Gets Long Term.

REGINA, Sask., April 16.—Seven years imprisonment in Prince Albert penitentiary was the sentence passed on Harold Fisher, Regina lawyer, by Judge J. H. Harmon, in District Court Friday after hearing Fisher's plea of guilty to sixty-five charge of forgery, uttering and thefts of cheques aggregating more than $32,000. Fisher was arrested in London, England, and brought back to Regina to face trial.

Until last July Fisher was employed by the firm of Mackenzie, Thom & Company, where his duties were largely in connection with the administration of infants' estates.

Fisher obtained the money by forging and uttering cheques on the accounts of the firm, and of estates administered by the firm.

Although restitution of approximately $11,000 had been made, Fisher refused to state what had been done with the rest of the money. His own counsel declared that he had no idea what had been done with it.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, April 16.—Although cattle receipts were again heavy at the Union Stock Yards last week, a good clean-up was effected, and indications are that the market will hold steady this week if the supplies are moderate. More than half of the week's receipts were received on the opening market of the week, and this brought about a slow trade, with prices lower for butcher cattle. A heavy offering on the following day resulted in further weakness, but the market steadied up at the mid-week and had a firm close. Elsewhere throughout the market trade was somewhat varied. The veal trade was weak, and the lamb trade had a poor close. Hogs strengthened but an easier undertone was in evidence at the end of the week.

Prices for export cattle remained unchanged, with the top price for heavy steers $8.25 a hundred. Most of the feeder cattle that were shipped to Great Britain this week were billed through from the West. An odd lot of store cattle, however, sold in the yards at $6.75 to $7.50.

In spite of a heavy offering of hogs, prices strengthened on Monday to $11.25, fed and watered. Sales were made at this level all week, although the market was inclined to be easier at the close.

There was an unusually light offering of sheep and lambs the bulk of the receipts being composed of a few western shipments. These brought $15.25 a hundred [illegible] lambs, $12 for yearlings and $8 [illegible] sheep.

Receipts of ca[illegible] were heavy, and this market was slow and easier. Prices reached the low mark of the year, with choice calves bringing from $8 to $9.50 a hundred, with the bulk of the offering selling from $4.50 to $6.50.

Receipts of live stock at the Union Yards last night for today's market were; cars, 246; cattle, 4,145; calves, 722, hogs, 4,922, sheep, 133.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, April 16.—Receipts 8,000; fairly active, mostly steady with Friday's average; top, $8.45¼ bulk 160 to 210-pound averages, $8.35 to $8.45; bulk 240 to 325-pound butchers, $8 to $8.30; packing sows, 15c to 25c lower, mostly $7 to $7.10; pigs, about steady; bulk desirable 100 to 120-pound weighs, $7 to $7.50; estimated holdover 2,000; heavyweight hogs, $7.85 to $8.30; medium, $8.20 to $8.45; light, $8.10 to $8.45; light lights, $7 to $8.45; packing sows, smooth, $7 to $7.35; packing sows, rough, $6.75 to $7.75.

Cattle—Receipts, 10,000; compared with a week ago; Beef steers and yearlings, 35 to 50 cents lower; in-between grades showing most decline, extreme top matured steers, $10.25; best long yearlings, $10; she-stock, largely 25 cents lower; good to choice light heifers showing less decline; bulls and stockers and feeders weak to 25 cents lower; vealers, largely $1.50 lower.

Sheep — Receipts 5,000; compared with a week ago; choice handyweights woolled lambs and in-between grades clipped lambs, 15c to 25c lower; other grades steady to strong; yearlings, wethers nominally steady; sheep steady to shade higher.

BOY SHOT HIS FRIEND.

Did Not Know Revolver Was Dangerous.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., April 16.—"Hold up your hands!" commanded seven-year-old Ray Norton to his playmates, nine-year-old Willie Hilton and his brother, Irvin Norton, also aged nine. The two lads, it is said, complied and Ray pulled the trigger of the .32 calibre revolver he held. The bullet hit Willie Hilton just below the heart, and he died a few minutes later.

The tragedy, which some people here think may have been indirectly caused through moving picture influence, took place Sunday night in a rear room of the fruit store of Louis Ross, a well-known Italian fruit merchant, on James Street.

His grandson, Willie Hilton, and the two Norton lads were playing together. Ray Norton found a revolver belonging, it is said, to an Italian employed as a truck driver by Ross, and supposed it was a toy pistol. The weapon was in a small case, in which the owner kept his razor and other things.

Coroner D. V. Currey and two other doctors were called, and it is likely an inquest will be held.

The little victim of the tragedy is a son of John Hilton, carpenter. The Norton boys lived near the store where the shooting took place.

The Italian said to own the revolver was so overcome that he cried like a child.

Governments in China Insolvent.

HONOLULU, April 16.—Both the Pekin and Canton Governments in China are insolvent, according to J. J. Abbott, Vice-President of the Continental and Commercial Bank of Chicago, who passed through here on his way to the United States after five months in Pekin in a vain effort to collect the interest on a $5,000,000 loan on which China defaulted more than a year ago. China's only hope for straightening out its tangled financial affairs, Mr. Abbott said, lies in putting into effect a 2½ per cent. additional tariff, authorized under the terms of the nine-power treaty of the Washington Conference.

THE PASSING SHOW OF 1923

In response to numerous requests the entertainment which was produced by the scholars of St. Mary Magdalene Sunday School at Christmas was repeated in the Strand Theatre on Friday and Saturday evenings, with a matinee on Saturday afternoon. For the passing show of 1923 many new features were added to the former programme and a number of new faces appeared among the performers. To describe fully the various numbers on the programme and the personnel of the cast would occupy much more space than is available. Not one item on the long programme could be termed poor and most of the numbers were splendid, showing thorough training for the parts taken and good management in the manner of presenting. Among the features of the programme "The Fairies" was particularly fine. The costumes, the dances and the setting captivated the audience. The two youngest performers, Mary Galbraith and Billy Powell, were highly appreciated and received a deserved encore. The classic dancing of Miss Jean Macpherson, of Toronto, was a revelation to the audience and the young lady was called back after each performance.

Miss Rouette Dalton is no stranger to Napanee audiences and her dancing never loses its charm.

At the evening performances the house was crowded and people were turned away for lack of accommodation and very few seats were unsold for the matinee.

The staging of the show was slow on Friday evening, but for the subsequent performances the staging was good. Mr. Harold Herrington promoted the show and must be congratulated on the success of his efforts.

Prohibition in Ireland.

BELFAST, April 16.—Northern Ireland is beginning a prohibition fight. Wet and dry forces have lined up and are prepared for battle over a new temperance bill soon to be introduced in the Northern Parliament.

The main features of the bill are abolition of licensed spirit grocers, close all licensed public houses and bars in hotels and clubs every week day at six in the evening and all day Sunday. There are five hundred spirit grocers in the six counties, 423 of them in Belfast alone and twelve in Derry City.

The drys are working out a scheme to compensate the spirit grocers but an official of the Spirit Grocers' Association declared Sunday night that withdrawal of the license would close down the two Belfast breweries that supply the grocers.

Fishermen Lose by Storm.

LEAMINGTON, April 16. — A severe storm has been raging on Lake Erie for several days, and considerable loss has been sustained by the fishermen on the north shore. On Saturday Mr. Dobbin's gill net tug was torn from her moorings and blown out on to the beach, where she was smashed into kindling, a total loss with no insurance. Mr. John Loop also of Wheatley, lost his pond net boat in the same manner, it being damaged beyond repair, valued at $2,000, with no insurance.

The MAN NOBODY KNEW

By

Holworthy Hall

Copyright by Dodd, Mead & Company, Inc.

"Mr. Hilliard?" His voice was pitched low, but its resonance was striking. Thirty years ago the doctor had been a famous baritone; and there was still one church in town which dated its musical supremacy from the choir he had organized and directed.

"Doctor Durant!" The two men clasped hands firmly. Hilliard, experiencing the dreaded sinking sensation which came upon him as often as the exposed himself to yet another old acquaintance, hardened as he perceived no recognition in the doctor's eyes. The inevitable reaction left him momentarily weak.

"It was good of you to take this trouble, Mr. Hilliard. I appreciate it."

Hilliard's denial was highly courteous; it was harder to hate the doctor than he had planned.

"No, doctor—It would only have been blamable if I hadn't."

"I insist that it's good of you. . . . You knew Dick intimately, I understand."

Hilliard nodded.

"Very intimately, sir, considering the length of time." He perceived that Carol was holding the letter lightly folded in her hands; she interrogated his glance, and colored proudly.

"It . . . It did belong to me," she said, subdued. "And I can never thank you enough . . . never . . ."

"My daughter," said the doctor, presently, "has told me the one great fact." He paused, then went on gravely. "I accept it," and it needs very little comment. But most concerns me now is to know the lesser facts. I have some hope, Mr. Hilliard, that you can make the lesser seem the greater; and the greater, the less. I want you to clear up the one cloud that still dims our knowledge. I hope you can tell us something about Dick's reasons for doing this thing—for going abroad at all, and for enlisting, and for—"

Hilliard winced; the doctor's autopsy on his character was considerably more disconcerting that Mr. Cullen's had been.

"Doctor Durant, I can't think it fair to put Dick's motives under the microscope like that! Why not forget everything but the attending circumstances to the one great fact, He—"

"I'm not unfair," said the doctor slowly. "I've never been unfair if I could help it, and certainly not to this man, above all others. Here is a case in which a man who left us most unheroically comes back to us, in spirit at least, as a hero. The particular thing he did is a fact. I'm proud of him for it—and so far, for that, and for that only. But it isn't true that by itself alone it made him a hero. And when I said that I'm interested in the lesser facts, I mean that Dick's reasons for going into the war at all may be the proof that he was a hero—and that any physical bravery he may have shown has nothing whatsoever to do with it. Please don't misjudge us. We're not trying to belittle anything Dick did; it's neither fitting nor possible. But what we want to know is where the credit lies—with Dick, a reasoning, inspired, determined man, or with Dick, intoxicated by danger, In the latter case, his heroism would appeal to us as a detached incident, having no relation to his earlier life or to our own; it would be something to bring us pride for that, but for nothing else. In the other case, the knowledge of the why, in addition to the what, would bring us . . . But about Dick?"

"You can be happy, then," said Hilliard uneasily, "because he went over, I believe, in the firm conviction that every man has two countries—his own and France."

"Yes?" The doctor sat down abruptly.

"As long as you're interested in what he did before he was wounded—"

"And afterward, Mr. Hilliard."

"—Rather than how he was hurt, let me assure you that as far as I know, from the first day he landed, I don't believe he thought once about his own misfortunes. He had them, I know. But if you've got any manhood in you, you can't think of your own troubles, over there. It's too fearful. The Carrel-Dakin solution heals all sorts of wounds, Doctor Durant, all but the worst wound of all—and that's what every man who has any humanity and any sympathy about him gets when he first sees France. His heart is torn clear out of him. He can't sleep, he can hardly live with his own thoughts. And that quiet resolution you speak about—it's enough if it comes to a man there! I don't care what he had in his mind when he left you; I don't care what it was that led him to go overseas; I don't care what his purpose was when he sailed; I know that when he stood on French soil there wasn't an atom of selfishness or self-pity in him. It wasn't a question of adventure; it wasn't a question of drowning his sorrows; it was a question of his doing anything and everything he could to help out. Let me tell you something," Hilliard sat on the edge of his chair. "It's possible that you never thought of Dick Morgan either as a martyr or a fatalist. Nor do I think he was. But when he was brought to Neuilly there was among his papers a little sort of field diary—I'm sorry it was lost, so I haven't it to show to you, but I saw it often—and under the date of his first tour of duty in the front line trenches was scribbled this, quoted from Rousseau: 'The dead carry to the grave, in their clutched fingers, only that which they have given away.' Doctor Durant, Dick went into this war in the belief that the only way to reclaim his life was to sacrifice it. Does that answer your question?"

There was an utter stillness. It had been a superb fiction, but Hilliard, thinking obliquely of Angela, was only partly sentient of his baseness.

"Thank you," said the doctor, and glanced at his daughter. "Yes. He had the making of a splendid man. I knew his parents and his grandparents. His career in Syracuse hadn't anything to do with his heredity. Mr. Hilliard; it was the result of badly chosen environment. He chose it himself, and he had all a young man's interest in temptation. But when those temptations were removed, when he was free to revert to his family traditions, why then he could—"

"It would please me a great deal more, doctor, if you looked at him independently and maybe a little less academically—if you didn't go so far beyond the actual facts."

"How do you mean?"

"Why," said Hilliard, "for one thing, in laying so much stress on his grandparents. Dick was the one who went overseas; his grandparents didn't! And his grandparents didn't go into action on the western front singing Stevenson's 'Requiem' at the top of their lungs and knowing that it was mighty appropriate, as Dick did!"

"What's That?"

"What?" said Carol, straightening. "What's that?"

"No." The doctor's negative was quiet, but decisive. "A man doesn't rise to heights of glory without some reason for it, Mr. Hilliard. But a man can resist his inheritance for a good many years, and suddenly stop resisting and revert to his family type. He can do it voluntarily or involuntarily. It's what we call atavism." He paused and smiled sadly. "The pity of it," he said, "is that in spite of his having failed in everything he tried to do in Syracuse, he would have made us proud of him, sooner or later, if he had stayed on here. I'm positive of that."

"Pity!" Hilliard straightened. This was the third time in two days that he had caught the intimation that he could come home decently and humbly and been forgiven.

"Not that I pity him for what he accomplished, or what it cost him," warned the doctor. "I don't; I was very fond of the boy, Mr. Hilliard, but I wouldn't for the world have had him do anything else than what he did. No—but I do pity him because he can never know what we think; because he can never know how much we gladly forget; because he can never know why we are proud of him."

Hilliard's pupils were distended.

"You were rather harsh with him, doctor, as I"—

"We were just, Mr. Hilliard."

"But if you recall the gist of Père Ta's speech . . ."

"I do!" The doctor regarded him pacifically. "And it's very seldom that mercy is asked to temper justice except after it's become evident that justice is actually going to be just. Let's not deceive ourselves. And let's not put each other in the position either of attacking or defending Dick. It's not the time for that now. He's done all that any man can do, and he was a most lovable boy—most lovable."

Hilliard nervously addressed himself to Carol.

"I hope you agree with your father, Miss Durant—that eventually he'd have succeeded in Syracuse?"

"I never doubted it," she said loyally.

And then the three of them fell simultaneously to musing, and for the space of a minute or two there was quiet; the sort of quiet which comes just after the benediction. It was the benediction which Carol had bestowed upon a wretched sinner who sat there wondering how he could ever escape from the toils of his own cleverness.

"How long are you to be in town, Mr. Hilliard?" inquired the doctor, irrelevantly.

"That I can't say, sir. I had no other errand than this."

"You've never been here before? That is, you haven't friends here?"

He had expected this question and prepared for it.

"Several years ago," he said casually, "I came to Syracuse half a dozen times one winter—on business. I suppose I could find my way around even now, if I had to. But comparatively speaking, I'm a stranger."

"You're a business man, Mr. Hilliard?"

"I told you he was, dear," said Carol.

Hilliard nodded.

"Yes, Doctor Durant. That is—I was. I have no business connections now. That's why my plans are so uncertain."

Again a heavy silence. Hilliard was sensing the impetuous haste which had caused him to lie himself into an invulnerable network.

"I'm sorry," said the doctor, rising abruptly, "but I've a consultation at half-past twelve. Thank you again, Mr. Hilliard, for coming to us; you've lightened my heart tremendously. I hope we shall see you again before you go."

"I hope so," said Hilliard, dully. He was whipping his brain to find a way out; but how could he explain those manifold, cruel falsehoods which once he had thought to be his retribution?

The doctor gave him a cordial smile, a parting pressure of the hand, and went down-stairs, leaving the two young people quite alone.

Hilliard, impelled to go and equally constrained to stay, fidgeted in his vacillation. He was uncomfortable and unhappy, but the current of his mood had no inclination to depart. He assured himself that he cared not the snap of his finger for Carol Durant; on the contrary, he was intolerant of her very presence; still he lingered, wishing that he might establish himself.

"And you really came all the way up here just to be kind to us?" she said.

"Just to be kind to Dick," he corrected.

Carol was winking hard; Hilliard sprang to his feet. He could never bear to see a woman cry; it was immaterial to him who she was, or what the circumstance; he was powerfully affected—distraught. His single aim was to console her—it was a selfish aim designed primarily to relieve himself.

"But it's easy to see," he said desperately, "why he was so anxious to have me come. . . . I have twice as many reasons to envy him now, Miss Durant. . . . I really have. And . . . and, unlike your father, I can pity him, too, for—"

"Oh!" she said, smiling tremulously up at him through the misty veil of her tears. "But y-you see, Mr. Hilliard, you're quite mistaken . . . I . . . I wasn't pitying Dicky; I was pitying me!"

He bit his lip sharply No reproach could have gone deeper.

"That was your letter, you said?"

"Oh, yes," she said. "It c-couldn't have been for anyone else! Thank you so much . . . for bringing it . . ."

He was trying to analyze the emotions which stirred him. He had told himself over and over again that his love for her was numb; and yet here he was . . . unsteadily balanced . . . tormented by her grief . . . and lying to her in his best sentence—to protect his previous lies, and to give to her what comfort he could.

"I want you to have his war cross, Miss Durant . . . I think it belongs to you more than to anyone else. . . ." He stopped and stood irresolute; for she had broken down completely. He watched her and slowly the blood burned in his cheeks! He tried to order his thoughts, to select his action . . . If he still loved her, he was there to console her; if not . . . he ought in all humanity to console her just the same, even if it took another of those inexcusable deceptions. For an instant he was on the point of succumbing to a wild impulse to blurt out the truth and take the consequences . . .;

He started; for she had motioned to him—motioned him away. He hesitated . . . then, in love, of repentance, or only his disquiet to see a woman cry? She motioned again, hysterically . . .

Hilliard's brain snapped; Syracuse had sung his praise too late. The doctor with his lame and disastrous was too late—Carol herself was too late with tears. His jaws came together; he glanced at her once more and then, in obedience to her gesture, he turned and tiptoed quietly from the room. The front door closed quietly behind him. The danger of succumbing was over and, he believed, permanently, and yet . . .

"Fruit-a-tives" is bringing health to hundreds and hundreds of people who suffer with chronic Constipation, Biliousness and Dyspepsia.

Mr. Frank Hall of Wyevale, Ont., says, "I purchased a box of "Fruit-a-tives" and began the treatment. My condition improved immediately. The dyspepsia ceased to be the burden of my life as it had been, and I was freed of Constipation."

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c. At dealers or sent by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa, Ont.

"Even Stephen" he whispered as he went down the steps.

CHAPTER VI.

Ordinarily Mr. Cullen was satisfied to bring a single evening paper home with him and when he laid it on the hall table it was generally creased down the financial page; but tonight he brought two, and each of them had wrinkles across the market reports and were folded so as to feature the departments devoted to local news. The Journal had beaten the Herald by two sticks and a subhead, but the Herald had honored Dicky Morgan with a one of the greatest means of doing good that this country of ours has ever known.

He Began to Fire Away.

away pointblank at Hilliard; and this was barely after the greetings, and a question as to the state of Hilliard's health, and before Angela had found an opportunity to get a word in edgewise.

"Understand you're a mining man, Mr. Hilliard," he said, pleasantly.

"I used to be," said Hilliard. "I've retired. I thought I told you so the first night I was here."

"Oh, yes—you did say something about it, but—" Mr. Cullen laughed with the fullness of one who has unearthed secrets. "It took some of our bright young newspaper crowd to ferret out the facts. You're too modest—that's what's the matter with you!"

Mr. Hilliard smiled in deprecation Angela, crowing triumphantly, snatched for the papers.

"Where is it?" she cried. "Where . . . oh!" And relapsed into beatific calm, devouring the none too conservative paragraphs with all her might. The cold-typed repetition of the well-known story sobered her considerably; still, it was for Hilliard's and her father's names that she gloated; and as for the panegyric of Morgan, that was only an added garland to the wreath which was already his.

"Russian and English syndicate wasn't it?" asked Mr. Cullen.

"Yes," said Hilliard. "English and Russian."

Mechanically, he began to rehearse the technical subtleties which he hadn't expected to find use for within a brace of fortnights. It was well, however, to be prepared; and the time to plant the seed of desire is when the prospect is willing.

"Mighty interesting game—mining," said Cullen. "Let's wander down by the fountain; shall we? . . . I don't know why it is, but it sort of fascinates me—guess it does everybody. More romance in it than most lines."

Here Angela looked up sharply, and gurgled with wicked satisfaction, and sent a lifted eyebrow signal across to Hilliard.

"Yes," said Hilliard, "but there's more tragedy, too. I suppose that's the law of compensation getting to work. Big profits call for big risks."

This was for sand in Cullen's eyes; and it had its effect.

"Oh, but the ratio's the same in almost any business, Mr. Hilliard, isn't it? It's about the same theory. Savings banks pay three to four per cent, but they never made a man rich yet. But copper has!"

"I'll have to admit," said Hilliard lightly, "that the odds are on the side of the experts. But as for the romance—" He smiled at Angela and wondered if he dared begin so soon to build up the framework of his mission.

"I've been telling Angela that it's mostly hard work. Once in a while you do run into something lurid, of course—romantic, if you want to call it so. I remember one bit out of my own experience," Angela had dropped the papers, and was listening as closely as her father. "A few years ago some friends of mine bought up an old abandoned property out in the Butte region; bought it for a song, and it was a very quiet peaceful little song at that, because metals had been dull, and—to continue the metaphor—my friends weren't in particularly good voice just then. But after they'd taken title, they realized that they'd only sung the first verse of the song, and there were a lot more verses and a pretty strenuous chorus. There was a shaft to be unwatered—had a lot of timber—work to do, and they were in for a big expense, and their credit had tucks in it, and the outlook wasn't any too rosy. But thirty yards from the main workings there was a fairish sort of tunnel, with the color of a vein—there's a blind shaft running down obliquely from a horizontal tunnel—and it pointed straight toward the main shaft, and it occurred to them that they could continue that wine another few feet, strike their main shaft about the hundred and fifty foot level, and save a lot of labor and expense that way by getting a clean approach to the shaft instead of taking a lot of bother with it in its decrepit condition. Well, they began to go down that winze, and inside of ten feet they struck a brand new and unsuspected vein—there hadn't been any outcrop showing; it was sheer, unadulterated luck, Dick. Then they had credit—they certainly did! To make a long story short, they pawned their futures, and begged and borrowed every penny they could lay their hands on, and they developed that property to the last cent, and when they had perhaps two hundred thousand or so tons of four per cent copper in sight, and there were indicated ore reserves of another half a million tons, they sold that property to a group of New Yorkers for an utterly phenomenal price, without ever having so much as touched the original shaft for which they'd bought the property!"

"Ouch!" said Cullen, and "Goodness!" said Angela.

"And," said Hilliard, smiling reminiscently, "if the original owners had pushed that winze for a couple of days more than they did, or if my friends hadn't decided to go at the problem in exactly that way . . . well, as I say what's one man's romance is another man's tragedy. My friends got their investment back in something less than four months, and after that it was velvet. And I've seen them in the neighborhood of two hundred times what they'd paid for it. That's mining history, Mr. Cullen." And indeed it was—and the only fabrication about it was Hilliard's claim of responsibility for the lucky owners. This, as he assured himself, was salesman's license—every successful operator is a "friend" of any salesman.

Cullen nodded thoughtfully; his eyes were fixed on Angela who attentively regarding him with indulgent pity, and sending I-told-you-so messages to Hilliard.

"Where was this—in Montana?"

"Silverbow county—near Butte. Yes, there's romance in that country, Mr. Cullen. It's in every tree and every rock, and in every hill and valley and under the ground. And I'm afraid I'm just enough of a realist to find most of my ore under the surface."

"To save my life," said Cullen, "I can't help thinking of that region as a Mark Twain sort of country—sombreros and six-shooters and Vigilantes and stage coach holdups and gold—"

"A medium of exchange. I know it's childish, but I've never been out there, and it's hard to get over what we learned at school." He surveyed his vaunted garden less arrogantly: the fountain, which in his moments of complacency had called the attributes of a geyser for him, was suddenly a feeble faucet, and the tidy lawn was no more seductive than a window-box.

"The up-to-date schoolbooks," said Hilliard, laughing, "have a good many changes in them. The West of the early eighties is all gone, the atmosphere is all gone, the old-style miners are all gone; you used to see some picturesque sights even ten years ago, but nowadays you best realize how the industry has changed when you see a couple of pals hunting for work in an auto drive up to a camp, ask for a job, get it, park the auto, take the tools out of the delivery body on behind, and pitch in. And you can imagine the other changes that accompany that one. Of course, that's especially typical of Arizona, but we get it in Montana, too. I'm not saying that the color has gone out entirely, because it hasn't, but in the old days the West was the West, and now it's moving East as fast as it conveniently can,

DU-KO

for Pies and Puddings

SAVES TIME-LABOR-MONEY

BECAUSE—It only takes 5 minutes to prepare.

BECAUSE—DU-KO only needs the addition of milk or water.

BECAUSE—DU-KO needs no eggs, sugar or extra flavoring to "improve" it.

The "Cheapest" is not always best. Compare the results you get from DU-KO with the price you pay for it. Figure the saving you make in cost of extra materials, time expended and work involved. You will find DU-KO is a real economy. Satisfaction guaranteed or money will be refunded.

First U. S. Woman Senator.

The first woman to write herself down a Senator of the United States is Mrs. William H. Felton of Georgia, whom Governor Hardwick appointed to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Senator Watson. Mrs. Felton is eighty-seven years old. She has been for years a figure in the intellectual and political life in her state and is a veteran worker in behalf of woman suffrage. Mrs. Felton will hold the seat only until the candidate chosen at the recent election presents himself at Washington, and it may be decided that she will have no right to sit at all, since the people have already elected a Senator.

A Rich Goose.

Twenty-two dollars and fifteen cents worth of gold, taken from the craw of a dead goose by a housewife at Invermere, B. C., caused a wild stampede up Brady Creek. The geese was fattened in a barnyard that includes the creek in its boundaries. Thirty-five placer claims have been filed on the creek, and mining will commence soon.

The Smallest Race.

The smallest races of mankind are the Eskimos, Mongols, Burmese, Japanese, Bengalese, Malays, Javanese and Hottentots, whose average weight when full grown is between 120 and 130 pounds. The big races include English, Scottish, Scandinavians, Bulgarians and the Northern or Tartar Chinese. The average weight of an adult man of these races is about 150 pounds. Next come French, Italians, Spaniards, Arabs, Turks and southern Chinese. Their average weight is between 135 and 140 pounds.

PREACHER AND FARMER

The Two Are Getting Closer Together Once More.

Many Prophets of Old Were Farmers—Preachers Have Done Much for Ontario Agriculture—O. A. C. at Guelph Was Planned by a Clergyman—Pastors Who Have Been In Pastoral Work Indeed.

(Contributed by Ontario Department of Agriculture, Toronto.)

The preacher and the farmer are drawing closer together. This is not surprising, for the former is usually a product of the soil. It is estimated that about 85 of our professional men, including clergymen, were raised on farms, and practically all of them have had to "do the chores" in their time.

Prophets of Old Were Farmers.

The Old Testament worthies were largely men of the soil. Abraham, Jacob, Moses and David were authorities in handling flocks. And was not Elisha famous for his record of following the plough "with twelve yoke of oxen before him." Amos went in for mixed farming — herds and fruits. Abraham Cowley quaintly remarks that the first man was a gardener, and it was only after the second tiller of the soil became a murderer that he began to build cities.

Clergymen Have Done Much for Ontario Agriculture.

Rev. John McCaul, an early President of the University of Toronto, was a great champion of farming, and read a paper before the Agriculture and Arts Association in 1858 on "Agriculture Among the Romans."

Rev. Egerton Ryerson, a celebrated Methodist leader, when Superintendent of Education for the Province, had several text books on agriculture prepared for our schools. If he were here to-day to behold the "see and do" work of our modern junior agriculturists, both boys and girls, he would be very much astonished, and would perhaps recite a "Nunc Dimittis."

A Preacher Devised the Plan of the Agricultural College.

Rev. W. F. Clarke, a Congregational minister, if not the father, may be termed the godfather of the Ontario Agricultural College. In 1869 he was appointed by Hon. John Carling, Commissioner of Agriculture, to visit the leading agricultural colleges of the United States—then very few—and report as to the possibility of such an institution succeeding in Ontario. His investigation was carefully made, and the scheme he recommended was so comprehensive and practical that it was adopted practically in its entirety, and was the foundation of the excellent college now in operation in Guelph. He edited the Canadian Farmer for many years, and was looked upon as almost omniscient in things agricultural.

Rev. Dr. Burnet, for over a quarter of a century a Presbyterian minister in Hamilton, was President of the Ontario Fruit Growers' Association for nine years in succession (1869-1879), was a specialist in pear growing, and had a grape named after him.

A Clergyman Who Has Been a Public Benefactor.

Rev. Dr. C. J. S. Bethune, for years Principal of the Boys' College, Port Hope, (Episcopalian), and for some years a professor in the Ontario Agricultural College, has long been regarded as one of the leading economic entomologists of his time. The researches and observations of the able scientist have saved annually thousands of dollars to the fruit and vegetable growers of the Province. For many years he was Secretary of the Ontario Entomological Society and editor of the Canadian Entomologist.

The late Rev. Thomas Fyles of Ottawa was also a noted entomologist, with a delightful literary style.

Rev. E. B. Stevenson, of Guelph, a retired Methodist minister, has long been reckoned, both in Canada and the United States, as a leading authority on strawberry growing.

A Preacher Who Managed an Experimental Farm.

Rev. Newton Woolverton, formerly Principal of Woodstock College (Baptist), was for some time in charge of the Dominion Experimental Farm at Brandon, Man.

Father E. A. Burke, a former editor of the Catholic Register, has also been well known, particularly when residing in Prince Edward Island, as an instructive speaker at gatherings of farmers, especially on such topics as fruit and vegetable growing.

A Trio of Active Men of the Manse.

Rev. A. H. Scott, of Perth, has been president of the Horticultural Society, and has given many helpful addresses on gardening, both home and landscape.

Rev. James Anthony has made a reputation in rural leadership, and is a well-known writer and speaker on agronomics.

Rev. W. M. McKay, while pastor in Weston, made the record of having procured more members for his local Horticultural Society, pro rata of population, than any other man in the Province.

The New Agriculture and the Rural Clergyman.

Agriculture to-day has a new outlook, and it cannot afford to neglect the rural clergyman; and most assuredly the minister who has a country congregation, or even a suburban one, cannot afford to neglect the new agriculture, lest the very ground, yearning for fruitfulness and beauty, should cry out in protest against him.

A later article will show what the Ontario Department of Agriculture is doing to assist rural pastors in the solving of some of the problems of country life now confronting them.—Thos. McGillicuddy, Statistics and Publication Branch, Toronto.

Britain's Coal Consumption.

According to the Coal Commissioners report British coal is consumed approximately as follows:—

	Tons.
Railways	13,000,000
Coasting steamers and bunkers	2,000,000
Factories	53,000,000
Mines	18,000,000
Iron and steel industries	28,000,000
Other metals and minerals	1,000,000
Gas works	15,000,000
Domestic	32,000,000
	162,000,000

The total output of coal used in Great Britain is about 260,400,000 tons annually, of which, besides the 162,000,000 consumed as stated, some 93,400,000 tons are, in normal times, exported.

An Electric Spark.

An electric spark will jump one inch in air, will travel about seventy-five inches in neon, one of the rare gases contained in the air.

A POLITICAL NURSERY.

Well-Known Canadians Who Entered Public Life at Atlantic Coast.

Nova Scotia and New Brunswick have been a nursery for the larger political fields of Ottawa for many years. Their premiers recently gave up office, Mr. Murray and Mr. Foster retired of their own accord, the former for a well-earned rest after 26 years in the premiership, and the latter to prosecute his own private business after six years in office.

Before Confederation Sir Charles Tupper and Joseph Howe had been Premiers of Nova Scotia, and both later took portfolios in the Dominion Cabinet, Sir Charles Tupper becoming Premier of Canada for a short time in 1896. Howe was but a short time in Federal politics after his conversion to the cause of Confederation in 1869.

Politics is more a matter of daily thought and conversation in the Maritime Provinces than farther West, and many men who take it up continue in the "game" almost to their graves. Those who have followed Dominion politics are aware of the debt which Canada owes to the provinces by the sea for the able men who have sat in Ottawa Cabinets as representatives from that section. Nova Scotia had another son in the Premiership at Ottawa who had been head of the local Government in the person of Sir John Thompson. Sir Robert Borden's name might be added, though he never was Premier of his own province. Mr. Fielding, the present Minister of Finance, was Premier of Nova Scotia from 1884 to 1896.

New Brunswick has contributed several of its own former Premiers to the Dominion Cabinets. Hon. A. G. Blair, Premier from 1883 to 1896, was Minister of Railways in the Laurier Cabinet for some years, and was one of a brilliant group called by Sir Wilfrid from provincial fields for his first "Cabinet of all the talents." Hon. H. R. Emmerson was Premier of New Brunswick from 1897 to 1900, and afterward Minister of Railways at Ottawa. Hon. William Pugsley, the present Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, was Premier for a few weeks in 1907, and afterward Minister of Public Works in the Laurier Cabinet. Hon. J. D. Hazen was Premier from 1908 to 1911, after which he entered the Borden Cabinet at Ottawa as Minister of Marines and Fisheries.

Keeping Up Appearances.

What discomforts people will suffer merely for the sake of appearances! In Santiago, Chile, says Mr. Harry A. Franck, in "Working North from Patagonia," there are poor but aristocratic families that, unable to afford the usual summer vacation that it is the custom for the upper class to take, shut themselves tight in the backs of their houses for two months or more and live on what food their trusted servants can smuggle in to them. A man who had every mark of being trustworthy assured Mr. Franck that he had been invited to the home-coming party of a family that he knew had not been outside Santiago in a decade.

A Safety Council.

The Safety Council of London is endeavoring to establish the custom of walking to the left, and it is asserted that many accidents will be prevented if this should be made general in England. The effort has so far been unsuccessful.

The King of Spain has had the longest reign of any ruler in Europe, having ascended the throne in 1886.

The Ford Has Passed Them All

In ten years the Ford Car has passed the street car, the horse and buggy and the locomotive as a means of transportation

The Ford has given the public transportation which combines all the advantages which other methods offer with none of their disadvantages

It is giving the railroads real competition in fast cross-country transportation.

It has ousted the street car in ready convenience and low mileage costs.

It has pushed the horse and buggy completely into the discard in low-first cost and low maintenance costs.

The number of people who buy Ford cars will set the price of Ford cars.

EGYPTIAN TREASURES

THERE IS A FINE COLLECTION IN ROYAL ONTARIO MUSEUM.

One Relic Dates Back to the Year 4715 B.C., and In Addition to Bronze Tools and Weapons, There Are Wooden Chairs and Other Articles From the Homes of the Ancients.

In the Ontario Museum in Toronto there is housed one of the most striking exhibits of relics from Egypt, which, no doubt, will be the object of much curious observation now that so much interest has been aroused in things Egyptian by the marvelous discoveries which every day's newspapers are describing.

Museum authorities have been following the recent discoveries with the utmost interest, and to them the object which was of the most antiquarian interest and which is said to have been removed from Tutankhamen's tomb is the whole chariot discovered in a perfect state of preservation.

One of the most interesting objects on exhibition at the Ontario Museum is the flint knife, black and shiny, with its handle encased in pure yellow gold, and which dates back to the year 4715 before the time of Christ. That would make this particular object sixty-six hundred and thirty-eight years old—possibly the oldest object on this continent. This knife is said to have belonged to King Zer.

A large number of these knives, similar in appearance to that which belonged to King Zer, are on exhibition. Some are almost perfect models of skilled workmanship, while others much resemble the stone arrowheads and flint weapons of the Indians and prehistoric citizens of America.

A number of swords, daggers, and other weapons, all of apparently great antiquity, and probably dating back about thirty-five hundred years, occupy one of the show cases. Most of these are made of bronze, and indicate the possession of much skill in those who so carefully fashioned them from the rough. Some bronze mirrors, now blackened with time, but capable of being polished into rich reflectivity, lie beside the war-like instruments. The belles of Egypt were evidently anxious about their looks, while the proximity of mirrors to swords suggest that women were worth fighting for in Egypt long ago as they are in our country and in modern times.

A bed, made of carved wood, and with its surface all covered with painted decorations, stands upon its four legs, two of them carved to resemble the hind legs of beasts, the tails woven around the legs not being forgotten. Although some thousands of years old, it differs in no essential detail from the couches on which half a million Canadian seek their nightly repose.

In the newspaper accounts of the recent discoveries, mention was made of the stools or seats with duck-bill extremities which are regarded as so wonderful by the Egyptian explorers. There is a perfect example of such an identical object in the museum. It was an ordinary sized stool, with the legs resting on a ... section, much resembling the bill or head and neck of a duck twisted back upon itself.

Near the case with the stools is another case with a number of baskets, woven by some deft pairs of hands probably forty centuries ago.

"I suppose the basket in which Moses was discovered was like one of these?" was asked, and the answer was that it was in just such a receptacle as that lying in its case that the great deliverer of the Israelites was found lying among the bullrushes beside the river when Pharaoh's daughter espied it, as she and her maidens wandered along the river's bank.

One section of the rooms devoted to Egyptian relics contains a number of mummy cases. One of the cases lies open, and there fully exposed to view is the body of a young woman. The very linen in which she was wrapped over twenty-five hundred years ago is there, in a perfect state of preservation. Her face is uncovered, the linen having been deftly removed from it. Her name is known. She was Hatasis, tall and thin, and if one can venture to presume, from the remains in the case, a striking beauty of the centuries dead and gone. She was harshly treated, after she died, for the contents of her body and of her brain were removed, and bitumen was poured into their places. Thus, although her mind perished in the long ago, still by reason of the harsh treatment, we still may look tenderly on what is left of her features to-day.

Several sacred hawks, cats and other animals, including baby crocodiles, wrapped in the coarse linen peculiar to mummies, lie in cases nearby. In the same case is a bird called the ibis, from whose body the linen has been carefully removed, and the very feathers which beautified its flight long generation ago are as intact, and just as lustrous as when they were imprisoned in their linen finery of the tomb.

An object similar to that which is said to have been taken from the tomb of Tutankhamen is on exhibition in the museum. It is in the form of a boat, about three feet long, with an elevated stern, with twelve figures on its deck, each armed with an oar, the one at the back of the boat with a long oar for steering.

Three most exquisite shawls of the very finest linen are on exhibition in another case. Several baskets of dried fruits, pomegranates and other fruits being quite recognizable in their died condition, even after the lapse of nearly two hundred generations.

On some of the walls are whole chapters in the history of illustrious Egyptians, and there are paintings and drawings on rock and on linen which are of more than passing interest. The beadwork and the gold and enamel ornaments are most beautiful indeed.

Personal Tit-Bits.

Lord Beaverbrook, the famous newspaper proprietor, started his career by selling papers in the streets of a New Brunswick city.

The Bishop of Exeter is extraordinarily absentminded. Once, it is said, after paying a visit to a large country house, he "tipped" his host and shook hands with the butler!

Sir H. Rider Haggard, the famous novelist, lost fifty pounds on his first book and in disgust he abandoned writing and became a lawyer. It was only as a spare-time hobby that he wrote his great success, "King Solomon's Mines."

HAS A WINNING SMILE.

Ottawa's Chief Magistrate Is Young and Always Busy.

Two years alderman, two years controller, and now for the third time mayor, is the enviable record of Frank Plant, who at the polls a few weeks ago, was returned by acclamation to the post of chief magistrate of the City of Ottawa. And this at the age of 39 years.

When Frank Plant first entered politics he was 33 years old. Ottawa from the first took to him and since his early days he has always and everywhere been a prime favorite. This has been amply demonstrated. Twice he headed the polls as alderman; again he headed the polls as controller. Last year he rolled up the greatest plurality of any man who has occupied the post of mayor in the City of Ottawa, the total vote in 1922 being 15,862, of which he captured 10,923 votes. This year he had no opposition, both newspapers of the city heartily endorsing him.

How does it happen that the citizens of the capital should repose such confidence in this "youngster?" He is, indeed, one, if not the youngest, of Canada's mayors.

The answer lies in the personality of the man. He brings to his work a logical and sane mind, and he dares to utter what he thinks. Added to that is sincerity of purpose, earnestness, and integrity. And above all, a smile that is positively disarming. It insists on expressing itself at the slightest provocation. Most people in Ottawa are acquainted with that fact as indeed with the mayor himself, and not a few simply call him "Frank." Yet withal, he is dignified, makes a good speech, and has the added and desirable quality of knowing when to quit.

He is a busy man. Ottawa has the most vexing and vital problem of the street railway up before it, yet he has the confidence of the people in that as in all other questions.

The mayor still finds time to attend to other matters apart from his official duties. He is chairman of the Police Commission, director of the Central Canada Exhibition, and this year the nominating committee of the Kiwanis Club selected him unanimously as president for the ensuing year.

The mayor finds time also to take an interest in sports. In this he is a keen enthusiast. He is president of the Ottawa Amateur Hockey League, president of the Ottawa Amateur Athletic Federation and vice-president of the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association. He is a member of the Ottawa Hunt and Motor Club, the Ancient Order of Foresters, the St. George's Society, Chaudiere Lodge, A. F. and A. M., and numerous other organizations.

Nature's Froggy Freaks.

When nature designed the frog she made him specially for swimming. But some frogs took a dislike to water and adopted a land life.

The tree-frog lives almost entirely amongst lofty branches. "Want to be a bird, do you?" said Nature. "Very well, we'll see what we can do." The result is a weird creature with a small body and long skinny legs armed with bird-like claws.

The barking frog possesses enormous air pouches which he inflates when he is annoyed. Suddenly he opens his mouth and yaps like an angry dog.

The nurse-toad was given a decoration which looks exactly like a pair of red bathing drawers, perhaps to remind him that his proper place is in the water.

Surinam toads are covered with deep pits, whose use was not discovered for some time. Each one is a nursery. The male takes the eggs as they are laid and deposits them one by one in the pits on his wife's back. Here they hatch out and actually go through the tadpole stage, obtaining the moisture that otherwise they would lack.

Tabooed Words.

Writing of tabooed words in "The Golden Bough," Sir J. G. Frazer says: "The Indians of Chiloe keep their names secret, and do not like to have them uttered aloud; for they say that there are fairies or imps on the mainland or neighboring islands who, if they knew folks' names, would do them an injury; but so long as they do not know the names these mischievous sprites are powerless. The Araucanians will hardly ever tell a stranger their names, because they fear that he would thereby acquire some supernatural power over themselves. Asked his name by a stranger who is ignorant of their superstition, an Araucanian will answer: "I have none." When an Ojibway is asked his name he will look at some bystander and ask him to answer.

Be Genial Over Cannon.

The Mayor of Boston is trying to interfere with a time-hallowed witticism when he asks Canada to return the small brass cannon, captured at Bunker Hill and now displayed in the Citadel at Quebec. On an average of ten times a day during the tourist season a Canadian "Tommy" points out this venerable piece to visiting Americans, who never fail to respond to the story of its capture with the retort, "Yes, you've got the gun, but we've got the hill!" Next to learning how to do the about-face snappily the hardest job before a Dominion recruit is to learn how to invariably respond to this ancient bit of humor with a genial laugh.

Unkind to Its Discoverer.

The miner was discovered coarse gold in the Klondike was a Nova Scotian, Robert Henderson, who went into the Yukon in 1894. He found good panning and reported the prospects to a man named Carmac.

Acting on Henderson's information, Carman and a party of three Indians accidentally made a find on Bonanza Creek and staked their claims without letting Henderson know of their luck.

So Henderson, who had been prospecting and "panning" in the vicinity of the big find for two years, and freely advertising his success, got only an ordinary claim in the new field. He was working on a claim paying only two cents the pan, while Carman and his Indians were getting ten cents the pan on a location that Henderson had indicated to them.

In his "Early Days of the Yukon" William Ogilvie quotes the letter of "a young man of Toronto who entered the service of the Hudson Bay Company in 1859, and was sent to the company's most distant post at Fort Yukon," in which mention is made of the existence of gold in the gravel of rivers in that region.

Humor from Book of Memoirs

It is recorded of Lord Salisbury that he had an exceedingly bad memory for names and faces, and frequently failed to recognize people he knew—even those with whom he was in daily contact.

Once he asked who was the "rather agreeable" young man who had twice brought despatches to his home for signature, and learned that he was a junior secretary who had been in attendance upon him for two years.

An even funnier instance is related by Mr. Douglas Ainslie in "Adventures, Social and Literary." A neighboring squire dropped in to dine with Lord Salisbury. Lady Salisbury was rather apprehensive that her husband might fail to recognize this somewhat obscure person, and was greatly relieved to find that he immediately engaged their homespun guest in conversation, which he kept up vigorously until the end of the repast, when the squire rather hastily took his leave.

Lord Salisbury then casually remarked, "I was glad Lord Roberts dropped in to luncheon to-day; but I fear he is not what he was intellectually. He appeared to be rather vague as to our military dispositions in Egypt, and his views on Indian questions seemed even more nebulous. But we all grow older."

Sir Edwin Egerton had an equally bad memory. Once, when he was British Minister at Athens, he had been for a walk, and on his return he said to his wife: "I've asked a young man I'm sure we've met somewhere to dine to-morrow. I can't for the life of me remember his name—I rather think he's a British subject. When I invited him in order to get on with my walk, he asked if he were to bring his wife; and what could I say but 'Of course, bring your wife'? I told him to come in a dinner-jacket, and warned him that we dined at 8.15 sharp and never waited for anyone. He gave a pleasant little laugh and accepted."

The mystery was solved the following evening when the Crown Prince and Princess of Greece were announced.

The Marquess of Clanricarde was said to bear a resemblance to the notorious moneylender Sanguinetti. The marquess once went to a friend and said, "I hear they say I'm Sanguinetti, the moneylender. I don't mind them saying that in the least, but what does rather annoy me is that Sanguinetti is also going about saying that he's not the Marquess of Clanricarde."

The old Lord Fife of an earlier generation was reputed to have been apt to discharge his right barrel at anything moving. At one shoot he aimed straight at what he believed to be a yellow rabbit, and bowled it over in the dense fern, giving it the other barrel to put it out of its misery. The "yellow rabbit," however, happened to be a beater's yellow gaiter.

A party was given by Sir Frank Lascelles, when Ambassador in Berlin, to notabilities in the city. The guests made a bee-line for the refreshment buffet, and made short work of the food, washing it down with champagne or beer, often taken alternately.

The staff of the Embassy was busily employed in seeing that fresh relays of food were brought up. The evening wore on, and still Berlin continued to guzzle. At last the attention of the ambassador's secretary (Capt. Patrick de Bathe) was attracted by the peculiar behaviour of Gen. Prince von ——, who was endeavoring to force a lobster wrapped up in a newspaper into his coat-tail pocket. Quick as thought, the secretary seized a large sauce-boat, and presenting it with a bow to the general, purple in the face with his efforts to conceal the lobster, said, "Excellency, you have forgotten the sauce!"

Snubbed by a Queen.

It seems always to have been true that a pioneer of any invention which is afterwards to become indispensable must suffer misfortune, and perhaps even perish, before his creation can win the recognition it deserves.

This was the case with the steel loom for knitting stockings, invented in the sixteenth century by William Lee.

Lee took his invention to Queen Elizabeth, but she withheld her patronage. Again he improved his machine, so that it would knit silk stockings—the Queen's love of silk hosiery had been one of her chief reasons for disinterest—but again he was disappointed at not receiving a royal grant.

Things were no better under James I., so he went to France, and when success was almost within his grasp at the French Court the assassination of the king balked him again. Broken-hearted, he died, but in the next century Oliver Cromwell granted a patent on his device to the Company of Frame-work Knitters.

A Guest of the Jungle.

Mr. Cherry Kearton, one of our most notable of big game hunters, has recently returned to England, where he reports that he has been repeating something resembling the adventure of Tarzan. Mr. Kearton has been lost in the jungle for three years, and in fact was given up for dead. His fate, however, was not so tragic—he was simply the guest and not the victim of the jungle, where he has been entertained by a tribe of enormous chimpanzees with whom he has lived for the past two years. He has brought one of his friends with him, Toto, who understands French, Spanish, and English, according to his host. Toto shakes hands, and every morning brushes his teeth.

The greatest number of deaths is caused by heart disease.

Canny.

An Irishman and a Scotsman were strolling down a street one day when they chanced to gaze into a shop window. Both had an eye for a pretty girl, and inside the shop was a particularly attractive specimen of her sex.

"Shure, Sandy," whispered Pat, "she's just the fairest colleen my eyes hiv rested on. It's myslif that'll go in and buy something, an' perhaps she will have a smile for me."

"I'll gang wi' ye," answered Sandy. "But, hoots, mon, ye needno spend a bawbee. All ye hev tae dae is tae ask her fur change o' a shillin."

THEY TELL THEIR NEIGHBORS

Women Tell Each Other How They Were Helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Woodbridge, Ont.—"I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for female troubles. I would have headaches, backaches, pains between my shoulders and under my shoulder-blades and dragging down feelings on each side. I was sometimes unable to do my work and felt very badly. My mother-in-law told me about the Vegetable Compound and I got some right away. It has done me more good than any other medicine I ever took and I recommend it to my neighbors. You are quite welcome to use this letter as a testimonial if you think it will help some poor sufferer."—Mrs. EDGAR SIMMONS, R. R. 2, Woodbridge, Ont.

In nearly every neighborhood in every town and city in this country there are women who have been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the treatment of ailments peculiar to their sex, and they take pleasure in passing the good word along to other women. Therefore, if you are troubled in this way, why not give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from roots and herbs, has for forty years proved its value in such cases. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. C

WANTED TO MURDER EDITOR.

John B. O'Higgins, economist, historian, humorist, and once a tip-top working newspaperman in Toronto and elsewhere, has very little confidence in personal items which come to a publication through the mails. He explains his reason for this aversion in a banking magazine, of which he is the editor, as follows:

We have before us a contributed paragraph for our social notes which a respect for the memory of a past experience prompts us to "kill," editorially. It reminds us that more than twenty years ago, when we were sharing the editorial responsibilities of the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, with Alf. Rubbra, we allowed to slip into the news columns of that paper an innocently worded four-line paragraph that had a punch written into it. We remember this particularly well, because we nearly got that punch. The details of the incident are as follows:

The correspondent of the paper at Innerkip, a village within the circulation area of the Sentinel-Review, mailed in a note to the effect that Dr. So-and-so, the village practitioner, had been in Woodstock over the previous Sunday, "attending a case of heart trouble." This looked to us like good advertising for the doctor—elevating him out of the rank of a country physician and placing him in the class of a specialist—so we decorated the item with the heading: "Called in Consultation," and marked it to "make-up" for front page.

When the doctor at Innerkip received that issue of the Sentinel-Review he declared war and mobilized in our direction. He explained—but not without expressing vigorous disparagement of our mental calibre—that he wanted his private affairs kept out of our so-and-so kind of a paper, as it was none of our you-know business if he were paying attention to a young lady in Woodstock.

And it only just then dawned upon us that our correspondent at Innerkip was of a playful turn of mind.

In the apologies that profusely followed, the zero hour slipped by without the threatened attack being launched, and the affair petered out in a skirmish in which we exchanged a few rounds down at the Oxford, the genial Billy Waites priming the shots. So the incident ended happily, but for the three years thereafter that we continued in newspaper work we maintained a "leary" and cautious attitude towards that class of local briefs which refer to any man's frequentations, whether casual or persistent. It's just none of our business where you Good Fridayed, Easter Saturdayed, or Easter Sundayed.

Execution Was Exaggerated.

Gustave Schoof is back again. Executed in the Tower of London as a German spy, according to announcement at that time, the former "broncho buster," lecturer, mounted policeman and adventurer, writes from his home in Claresholm, Alberta, that he is alive and kicking and as loyal to the British crown as ever.

Major Schoof as he is best known, was a lecturer through eastern Canada for several years following the South African war. His adventures had been many.

Running away from Schleswig-Holstein as a youth to escape military service under the hated German, this ardent Dane landed in the United States when cow punching was in its prime. He became a broncho buster in Kansas but found the life too slow. So he went to Africa and broke horses for the British in the last Zulu war, took part in the Jameson Raid, hunted big game and finally settled in Canada.

Schoof did not get to the Balkan War, the reason being that he was in the Mexican Revolution. He wanted to go to the Great War but was too old. On June 21, 1917, there was executed in the Tower of London, a German spy who gave his name as Gustave Schoof. In reality he was one Schwartz who had heard Schoof lecture in Minneapolis. Hearing of this, Major Schoof had his own name officially cleared. In 1922, in order to square himself publicly with the people of Minneapolis, he walked in his British uniform in the Armistice Day parade in that city. Between wars, Schoof served in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police. To-day he is a game garden and a retired member of an Alberta cavalry regiment, a lover of fighting and a hater of militarism.

THAT WOOD PILE

There ain't no poor in Napanee.
Hard times have changed to good,
The ones that lacked a litle
Wealth
Have died for want of wood.

Let's sell them wood, and "do"
them good,
Said a few men of renown ;
For we can palm off anything
To the simple folks round town.

We find it cheaper yet to burn
Our carpets and our chairs
It finds a job for some poor soul,
And our fuel is less than their's.

So Councilmen of Napanee.
If your reasonings none too good,
Just get your heads together
Then we'll have lots of "wood."

DEAR PEOPLE :—

How's your winter's coal hanging out ? Ours is out altogether, but we are not buying much of this charity wood. Oh, no, we have faith, and hope yet to be spared enough sense to know a good thing when we see it. We try to buy economically, and at the same time do the fair thing: Our Saviour said, "Go Feed the Flocks," so you'll pardon us for referring to the word (feed) ; feed it means (not fleece). Now people don't be offended at our little chat ; we want to keep you from geting the (blues), and remember one thing, "don't get your feet wet." We are still here and doing fine. If we can't keep your house warm we can at least make your feet feel happy. So when you're down town drop in and get warm by our (Hot Air System).

Vestry Meeting.

The annual vestry meeting of St. Mary Magdalene's church, was held on Monday evening. The accounts presented by the Church wardens showed a very satisfactory state of the finances of the congregation. During the year repairs have been made to the tower, costing over $350, new matting placed in the church, a sink installed in the basement, the memorial gas brackets wired for electricity, and other repairs and improvements made. The Church Women's Guild raised over a thousand dollars for these and other objects. The Mission apportionment of $498.00 was paid in full, and all other obligations met. The Sunday School contributed over $100.00 to the Mission apportionment and also presented the church with an additional fire insurance policy for $10,000.00, with the premiums paid for the next three years. The Vestry thanked all the organizations for their good work and passed a standing vote of appreciation of the services of the Vicar, Rev. Rural Dean Coleman. The Church Wardens, W. S. Herrington, K.C., and W. J. Doller, and all the other officers were re-appointed. The Lay-delegates to Synod are F. F. Miller, R. G. Wright and T. B. Wallace. It was decided to mark with special observance the fiftieth anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of the Church on July 1st, and to have a Jubilee celebration next year when the building will have been in use for religious purposes for half a century.

BOYS' CLOTHING WEEK
APRIL 20th to 28th

After weeks of preparation we are now in a position to announce the dates for our Annual Boys' Clothing Week. Commencing Friday, April 20th, and continuing until Saturday night, April 28th, we will have an unusual display of Boys' Clothing—Suits, Top Coats, etc.

The very newest Models will be shown, also newest Patterns, Weaves and Colorings. We are very much enthused over the Models of our Boys' Bloomer Suits for this season. The materials are worthy productions. Colorings, Patterns and Weaves are such as will appeal to the boy's fancy, satisfy the mother's ambition to have her boy well dressed, and the price will not reduce dad's purse enough to hurt very much.

A Few of the many Models Shown in Bloomer Suits

No. 3930—Single breasted, three button coat, deep centre back vent, two lower pockets with flaps, out breast pocket with welt, all-round belt. Bloomers have Governor fasteners and loops for belt. Material is an all wool Tweed in a Reindeer and Blue mixture. May be had in sizes 29 to 36. Priced at from $8.25 to $10.00, according to size.

No. 3931—An all wool Tweed in Brown and White mixture, made in a three button, single breasted model, with all-round belt and deep centre back vent. The lower pockets have flaps and out breast pocket is welted. Governor fasteners on Bloomers and loops for belt. Sizes in this line are from 28 to 36. Very reasonably priced, according to size $8.00 to $10.00.

See the display of Boys' Wear In our three large windows

No. 3108—A three button, single breasted Coat, plain back, all-round belt, fancy tabs with button on lower and outside breast pockets. Bloomers are full fashioned and have the Governor fasteners, loops for belt and two side, one hip and one watch pocket. A Grey and Black herringbone stripe in a good strong, durable Tweed, may be had in all sizes from 27 to 36. Priced according to size, from $7.50 to $9.50.

No. 3020—Same quality, style, prices and sizes as above, in a Brown and Green herringbone stripe.

No. 3023—One of the most popular Bloomer Suits to be had. A neat over check in a Purple and Brown mixture. Coat is single breasted, straight front, all-round belt, lower pockets trimmed with fancy flap and button, plain back. Bloomers have Governor fasteners, loops for belt, two side, one hip and one watch pocket. Sizes 27 to 36. Prices $8.00 to $10.00, according to size.

No. 3025—Same style, sizes, quality and prices as above in a Brown and Green mixture.

No. 5041—Three button, single breasted Coat, with all-round belt; lower pockets have flaps, fancy pleat down front and back. Bloomers have loops for belt and Governor fasteners. This model is made in an all wool Serge of Navy. One of the best values we have shown in many a day. Sizes from 28 to 35 and very reasonably priced at $10.00 the suit. A worth while value.

No. 4006—An all wool Tweed of plain Fawn, patch pockets with button, all-round belt, fancy pleats from shoulder to waist at back, deep centre vent, Lustre lining, full fashioned Bloomers with Governor fasteners and two side one hip and one watch pocket. Sizes are from 29 to 36. Prices $10.00 to $13.50.

No. 3524—Light Grey mixed stripe, made in same model as above and priced at from $10.00 to $11.50.

Nos. 3873, 3874, 3875 and 3876—Four different colorings in same quality and model, Grey mixture, Blue mixture and two shades of Brown mixture.

Coats are single breasted, three button, all-round belt, fancy pleats back and front.

Bloomers have two side pockets and one hip pocket, belt loops, Governor fasteners, and are full fashioned. Sizes 26 to 34.

Price for any of these sizes, Suit and extra Bloomers $13.75.

Many Other Pleasing Modes Shown in Our Assortment

HAVING TWO HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-SIX BLOOMER SUITS ON OUR RACKS GIVES YOU AN ASSORTMENT TO CHOOSE FROM THAT IS WORTH WHILE

BOYS' ODD BLOOMERS

A splendid assortment of colorings in Tweed Bloomers. Most of these have double seats, which means almost double wear. Good strong, reliable materials. Range of sizes from 24 to 36. Priced at from $1.50 to $3.00 pair.

BOYS' TOP COATS

Made from a good quality of all wool Navy Serge, fancy design on sleeve, brass buttons, vents in sides. This is a popular garment for boys up to 10 years. Very reasonably priced at $6.00.

TO MAKE THIS AN INTERESTING EVENT FOR THE BOYS, WE WILL PLACE ON SALE A NUMBER OF BOYS' TWEED BLOOMER SUITS, COMMENCING FRIDAY, APRIL 20TH, AT $6.25.

These are made from good strong, wearing materials in Brown and Grey mixtures. A neat model, three button, single breasted, all-round belt, deep centre vent. Bloomers have patented fasteners and are full fashioned. Any size from 26 to 36. On sale, commencing Friday, April 20th, at $6.25.

BOYS' AND CHILDREN'S FURNISHINGS

We fully realize that the boy is "father to the man." We also realize that boys who are brought up by their parents to be careful of their clothing, to be proud of keeping themselves looking neat and well kept, will make better citizens than those who grow up careless and regardless of how their clothes look. Therefore we look carefully after the boy's requirements and we try and secure the best to be had at a reasonable price.

It will pay you to come to us for his furnishings as well as his clothing.

New Shirt Waists at 85c., $1.00 and $1.25.

New Fine Shirts at $1.00 and $1.25.

New Colored Shirts, with attached collars, 75c. to $1.00.

Caps and Tweed Hats, etc., at $1.00, $1.25 and $1.50.

All Wool Jerseys at $1.50 to $2.25.

Also Neckwear, Hosiery, Underwear and all the other necessaries.

Quality, Service, Value.
